'twas a Wonderful Night for the Irish at St. Pat's Shindig

"Sire, I do not know how to blow retreat—my grand sire never taught me that—but I can sound a charge that will make a chorus man kick a cabdriver off his seat and run him ragged."

"With these words ringin' in his ears, the great leader paused a moment, then replied—'let'er flicker, me lad'—and the attack was on. The Little Corsican I think it was, that they claim said the latter words, but the boy with the bugle was Irish."

"'Twas a wonderful night for the Irish, it was, Mr. Dooley. Of course it will be that of the St. Pat's Ball that I do be speakin' of. I only wish you could have been there. 'Y see—it was this way."

"Orders had evidently come from the awid saint himself, about as follows: "Proceed immediately with all forces available against General Gloom and continue the attack until further notified."

"And 'twas with right good faith, his followers took up the fight. 'Tis me only wish that you could have been there to see it for yourself."

"The skirmish line lay forinst Columbia Hall and the zero hour was set for 9 o'clock sharp. Now there had been clashes before the main battle with some spalpeens who hadn't been identified so 'twas with no small joy that I saw the shillalah squad on outpost duty as I approached the firing line. With me trusty invitation in me pocket as the countertergins I files down the communicatin' trenches and removes myself from all unnecessary equipment, as is customary for all orderly sodgers before goin' into conflict."

"I steps out and there before me eyes spread the panorama of the battle line—and a sight it was for sore eyes, I'm tellin' you. I had come in late, expectin' that a man of my age would be of more value as reinforcements than otherwise, but there was no need of me. Colonel 'Doc' Miller with his stem windin' Jew's-harp was layin' down a barrage on the inimy as I entered the fray. There was the standards of Erin, fair full in the battle line and the fairest and bravest followin' of the blessed awid saint that ever me eyes was laid upon. They was chargin' with great speed on all sides and engagin' the inimy in mortal combat. Says I, let's git in while the zittin's good and forthwith leaped amongst them."

"'Twas then I noted for the first time, Sergeant Palmer of the combat patrol with a six-gun nestlin' on his hip reconnoiterin' on the side-lines. From him I learned that there had been an attack earlier in the fight by a battalion of social climbers who had tried to disguise themselves as insulators on the telephone poles alongside the battlefield but was informed they had been repulsed with heavy losses. From what I could learn from those who had been there on the kick-off, the inimy was fightin' a losin' battle and to tell you the truth, Dooley, he was not even in sight when I got in the game."

"You'll remember, Dooley, how your history do be tellin' you of that French giral, Joan of Arc, who appeared on the battlefield to cheer her sodgers? I was thinkin' of that when down the lines came the Queen of the Knights of St. Pat, Miss Dorothy Craig, and 'twas a swate picture she made. There was page-bearers holdin' in' the train of her gown of emerald green—and 'twas then I was sayin' to me self—what a pity the gov nor had to lose the chance to crown so fair a head. The appearance of the queen seemed to work them all to a frenzy for with hollerin' and shoutin' of 'All Hail the Queen', they couldn't be kept from the battle."

"I was noticin', the time, Dooley, some foghorn forinst the side-lines, wonderin' what they might be for and 'twas with no little surprize that I learned that them wantin' to steal the credit from the younger fellows, I sneaks down the communicatin' trenches past the weary shillalah wielders who were waitin' the adjournment of the victorious army and wends me way homeward."

"All of which reminds me, Dooley, of the famous sayin' of the old Knickerbocker fathers when they was contemplatin' the throwin' of the Hudson river bridge across the stream from Manhattan. Says one of them to another, 'When you've got a job like that to be done, it takes the Engineers to put it across proper.' And says I to meself—'That goes twicet.'"

YOUTHFUL AMATEURS OPERATE WIRELESS HERE BEFORE DAWN

Paul Revere dashing madly through the night to deliver a message from house to house has been eclipsed by four Columbia boys who relay messages all over the country by wireless from 4 o'clock until dawn, almost every morning. The boys, all of them amateur wireless operators, are Thomas and David Cunningham and Nelson and Kenneth Nebel. These two pairs of brothers have wireless outfits erected in their own homes.

The reason for such early operation, according to David Cunningham, is that it is much easier to send messages before daylight. All of the messages handled by these boys are sent out by other amateur operators. Speaking of this, Kenneth Nebel said:

"No, we can't make any charges for it. It's just for the practice we get out of it, but the rates charged by the commercial stations are higher than the telegraph rates."

A question about the kinds of messages which they handle made the two, David Cunningham and Kenneth Nebel, smile. "Well," said Kenneth, his eyes dancing at the memory of it, "we got a regular love letter from Jefferson City for a fellow out on University avenue the other night." And David added, "We had one not long ago about the death of some man which was sent to his relations, but usually, they are just 'greetings by radio' and as short as possible."

"Thomas relayed the governor's message to the President last week," continued David. "He sent it to some station over in India and from there it was shot over to Washington."

Not only messages are received but also a great many signals or station calls. Speaking of that, David said, "The country is divided into sections and each section is numbered. There is a radio inspector in each section and we have to get a license from the one in our section. The signal of each station begins with the number of the section and is followed by the letters of the station. We are in section nine."

"I would like to be payin' special admiration, Dooley, to the field marshal that is willin' to come down into the firin' line amongst his followers. 'Tis Dean McCaustland that is the great man he is—no wonder his sodgers would follow him to the fight. He was in amongst 'em all the time, utterin' words of encouragement here as he passed a raw recruit still valiantly countin' 'One, two, three-kick', spreadin' good cheer there. 'Tis a likely man, the Dean is, and a born leader."

"'Twas thus the fight went, Dooley, attack followin' attack until the greaseball of the outfit, a fellow named English, blew mess-call. Only a few was trusted to eat at a time, the rest remainin' at their posts. Whilst the few was eatin', the mahogany moppers-up killed off the wounded of the inimy with three course services that would have made you, glutton that you are, foreswear your god and country."

"Then an airplane in the form of Miss Dixie Dunham, sailed out and dropped an Irish jig right square in the enemy's territory that from all reports worked a terrible havoc. And thus the battle wint."

"After a time, some scouts reported that no trace of the inimy could be found, the rout bein' complete. Some casualties was developin' amongst our own ranks and bein' an old man and considerin' that the hour was one o'clock Friday, I reports to Capt. Dan Hughes who declares that after a final barrage durin' which Colonel Duce would embroider an old familiar chue on his tympanum-disturb-er, we would call a halt for a year. Thinkin' this to be my cue—and always bein' a modest man, Dooley, and not

Motor Lubricants for 30 Million People

REFINING crude petroleum to produce a multiplicity of useful products is a highly specialized branch of industry.

The refining of gasoline and the manufacture of lubricating oils each require special treatment. Motor lubricants are made from specially selected crude and the portions of such crude best adapted for high quality motor oils are extracted during the first operations of refining.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is proud of its achievements; proud of its enviable record as a manufacturer of gasoline, and equally proud of its record as a manufacturer of lubricants for all types and classes of machinery.

During 1921 nearly 25 million gallons of Polarine, the perfect motor oil, were manufactured and sold. This enormous gallonage went to the consumer with the unqualified guarantee of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) that no better lubricant for an internal combustion engine could be made.

Lubricating oil is the most vital factor in conserving your car investment. In making definite recommendations for lubricating your car this Company realizes the importance to you, and to itself, of knowing exactly what each machine requires.

The responsibility of the Standard Oil Company, (Indiana) is emphasized when you consider that in the territory served there are more than 3 million automotive vehicles under registration. These machines represent a total investment of more than 2 billion dollars.

Every drop of motor oil manufactured by the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is made to meet definite requirements worked out in the Company's laboratories by skilled chemists, refiners and lubricating engineers who have given careful study to the technical problems and their practical application under working conditions, which the oil must meet.

It is because they have given such painstaking attention to every detail of manufacture and application that the Company has been able to produce Polarine, the perfect motor oil.

It is this painstaking attention to every detail, in every branch of its business, that has made this Company a leader in the industry.

It is by such sustained, conscientious, enthusiastic effort, to keep faith with its patrons, that this Company has won the confidence, esteem and respect of the public it serves.
