island in three graves. Thomas Lorio was killed by a falling tree Florestine Broussard, the wife of Louis Broussard, and two children; were drowned. In the Broussard house, Ferdinand, Bernard, Regius, and Bernardo Broussard, were discovered, all of them drowned. Hundreds of bodies have been found since Monday morning and they were buried without a prayer, and the chilling wind sighing through the leafless trees over their unmarked graves is only dirge for the dead.

APPEAL FOR AID
New Orleans, La., Oct. 6.—The following was telegraphed to the commercial exchanges at Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Kansas City, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha and other places:

Office of the Board of Trade (limited). New Orleans, La., Oct. 6.—A terrible disaster has destroyed a majority of the inhabitants of the island and marshes adjacent to this city, and the survivors are left penniless, their stock, houses, boats, and means of livelihood gone and they are in dire distress. The people of Louisiana will bury the dead and feed the starving, but appeal to a generous public to assist in contributions which will enable thousands of deserving people to again follow their avocations and support their families. Subscriptions of every character will be thankfully received and be disbursed by the executive committee of Board of Trade acting jointly with committees of other commercial bodies.

Why is he So Irritable?

This question is often heard and nearly as often unanswered. It is not often remembered, as it should be, that the occasion of ill temper and irritability is often to be found in the physical condition of the person affected. What is the use of trying to harmonize a man whose liver has gone back on him? If a man is tortured with rheumatism how can he be expected to be affable and agreeable? Can a confirmed dyspeptic be expected to be cheerful and always ready to tell a funny story? The only way to remove the difficulty is to get at the cause. Dyspepsia, rheumatism, and impure blood yield to Hood's Sarsaparilla, this is why it is an effective tranquilizer, a peaceful messenger and a preventive of domestic quarrels.

CRIME OF A COLORED BRUTE.

A Brutal Assault Made Upon a Young Lady of Fort Scott.
Fort Scott, Kan., Oct. 6.—A big brutal negro to-day at 11:30 entered the residence of E. C. Barr in a prominent residence portion of the city and asked Miss Agnes Barr, a pretty 18-year-old girl, who was alone in the house, for something to eat. She refused him and he assaulted her in a most fiendish manner. The girl had just recovered from a severe attack of illness and was helpless in his hands. He beat and kicked her and left her insensible on the floor. He then robbed the house of all valuables he could find and fled. She was found lying on the floor a few minutes later by her brother, and the alarm was given.

In an hour 500 armed men were in pursuit of him and the wooded district to which he fled is still being scoured by them. The Missouri Pacific railroad shops were closed down and the employes joined the pursuit. He has not been found, but it is probable he will be before morning. If so he will be lynched on the spot, as indignation has reached its height.

One colored man was arrested this evening and was taken to her house for identification, followed by a mob of infuriated men. She said he was not the man and he was released. The sheriff has surrounded the city with guards to prevent him from escaping to night. The girl is in a critical condition. She was kicked in the stomach by the brute and may not recover. She is of highly

AWFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

One Thousand Persons Killed at Chenieri by the Storm. Entire Town Obliterated.

Twelve Hundred Dwellings Are Totally Destroyed.

Ground Upon Which Towns Stood Torn and Rent Asunder.

New Orleans, La., Oct. 6.—The Pienyone's relief steamer, the Emma McSwaney, returned at an early hour this morning from Grand Isle and Chenieri. Houses were lifted from their foundations and thrown several hundred feet. The Grand Isle hotel with its contents, valued at $75,000 is totally wrecked.

The inhabitants of both islands are in need of clothing, water and provisions. The relief boat distributed all that it had; she took on a cargo of provisions this morning and proceeded direct to Chenieri. Nine hundred dead bodies have been found floating in the waters of Grand lake. At Bay Caminda, a family of six were washed to sea on a raft, and washed back again when the wind changed. The property loss on both islands will be very heavy. The loss of life at Chenieri is not less than 700, and may reach 1,000. Only eighteen persons were killed on Grand Isle, though the destruction of property there was great.

On Cheniere Caminda a climax of horror was reached. Cheniere is one of that group of islands which extended along the lower coast, and to which was a station for fishing boats. It contained one town—Camindaville—of about 1,600 people, the majority being fishermen. On Sunday evening there were 1,200 dwellings within its limits; today twenty-five only remain standing, and of these not one is uninjured. The very ground upon which they built is torn and rent. The pier has disappeared; only a heap of oyster shells marks the spot where it stood.

As one advanced the foot sank into an oozy slime that covered the paths. This was the relic of the seas which had for many hours covered the island. Camindaville was renowned for its luxuriant shade trees and lovely gardens. Not a leaf remains upon the branches and the trees for the most part are prostrated upon the earth. Paths have been obliterated and the reporter was obliged to scramble through the bushes, mounting the accumulated rubbish from ruined homes. Fields had formerly existed in considerable numbers along this portion of the front, but they had been blotted from the face of the landscape. The plants, almost without exception, had been blown from the beds, and those which the gale had spared were dead and yellow.

Fathers and mothers are burying their sons and daughters and children their dead parents. As many as ten people are placed in one grave. Hundreds of bodies are still unburied. Some are under the wrecked building, others are floating on the bay of Caminda. The brave little band of grave diggers is exhausted. They have already buried in the rude graves on the island 980 persons and their work is not yet done. A 10 year old son helped to bury his aged father and his elder sister in the same grave. There was no weeping even for father or brother. The gloom and horror of the situation were too awful for tears.

In the house of Mr. L. Terreboune the grave-diggers found his body and that of his wife and six children. The body of the husband and father was lying on the kitchen floor. It was buried about fifty yards from the wreck. The party went to the front of the house and there found Mrs. Terreboune's body; clinging in her arms was a babe. She and her babe were buried in the same grave with the father and husband. Near where the mother was found were five other children, ranging from 12 to 4 years. The eldest had met death by a big piece of lumber falling and crushing his skull. The others were all drowned. They were taken out of the portion of the house that still stood and buried near their parents.

In the rear of the island hundreds of little mounds marked the resting places of those who were killed in the terrible storm. There were many other burial parties. Men, women and children joined in the search for the dead. With poles and hooks and ropes, they drew the corpses from the water, or dragged them from the debris that strewn the land and buried them. In Mme. Ducro's house were found fully fifty bodies, all mangled in some manner, and could not be identified. They were buried ten and fifteen in a grave. Mme. L. Cidioc and her daughter, Delphi, were found many yards from their ruined home. They had been drowned in one of the gulches in an attempt to reach the store of Mr. Valene. In their home were the bodies of a son and daughter of Mme. Cidioc, drowned. The whole family was interred in the same grave. All the members of the Bisani family, except Felix and Andrew were killed. Arthur Bisani, Leo Paul, their wives and children, with numerous cousins, aunts and other relatives were all drowned in the homestead of the family. This family consisted of twenty five people. The bodies were dragged out and were buried in the west center of the
