Hot Fight on House Rules

At. Representative Lloyd introduced several bills during the week affecting St. Louis and Kansas City.

Constitutional Convention.
A bill that caused a great deal of comment and that, if passed, will be of great importance to the entire state was introduced by Representative Speer. His bill provides for submitting to the people the question of calling a convention for the revision of the state constitution at a special election to be held the first Monday in November, 1913, and stipulates that if a majority of the people are in favor of a constitutional convention, two delegates shall be elected from each state senatorial district to meet in Jefferson City the first Monday in May, 1913, to begin its deliberations. The latter provision is not kindly received by the Republican members, since they feel that such an arrangement would give the Democrats the control of the convention, owing to the present complexion of the senate. When the bill comes up for final consideration an attempt will be made to remove this clause and substitute one that would be suitable to both parties. The bill has the support of the members from the second and third class cities, since matters of vast importance to them would be taken up for consideration. Among other things would be the matter of raising the salaries of the governor and other state officials. The bill also carries a provision to appropriate $50,000 to meet the expenses and salaries of the officers and members of the convention.

Representative Vernon had a bill passed to provide that teachers be permitted to teach anywhere in the state upon their county certificates.

Representative Harris' bill to authorize the purchasing of bloodhounds for the purpose of running down criminals was passed. The bill authorizes the county courts to purchase the hounds. It is argued that in many counties of the state it would greatly aid in the capture of criminals without waiting for dogs from the larger cities.

The house and senate are daily in receipt of petitions asking for the abolition of convict labor. They are presented by the members from the districts where union labor is paramount and in connection with the petitions Representative Fear, former member of the American Federation of Labor, and who is acknowledged as being the labor representative in the house, introduced a joint and concurrent resolution submitting to the qualified voters of the state the question of prohibiting the leasing of convicts to any firm or corporation and providing that they be employed by and under the direction of the officials of the state.

The number of bills introduced in the house exceeds 1,000, which goes to show that the fire did not have such a harassing effect on the really ambitious lawmakers. It is expected that if matters are carried along in the same fashion for the balance of the session there will be no need for the assembly to exceed the seventy-day limit and thus draw only $1.00 per diem for their services. The fire checked the work of the legislators for about one week and about all the legislating that could be accomplished during that time was to meet and adjourn, and there are those who are cruel enough to hint that poker was the other diversion; that the members from the rural districts increased their earnings at the expense of the solons from the larger cities.

Bill for New Capitol.
The bill that will in all probability receive the earliest attention of both branches of the assembly is the one to erect a new capitol. The bill introduced by Alford of Springfield provides for the erection of a five million-dollar state house, but does not designate where the edifice shall be located. Events of Washington county sought to test the sentiment of the members with reference to the location by introducing a resolution providing for the retention of the building in Jefferson City "until it shall in the wisdom of God be destroyed." Members felt that it would not be a good idea to put the legislature on record as favoring one site in preference to another at this time. They contend that matters will be in better shape for such a move after the sentiment throughout the state has been thoroughly tested and when the bill comes up for final consideration they will be in a better position to act judiciously in the premises. The Evans' resolution was therefore sent to a committee. The senate bill provides for the erection of a three million-dollar capitol and it is believed that the latter bill will be the one finally agreed upon by both branches, and that it will be ratified at the special election to be held for that purpose. For a time there was opposition to the special election and many of the members held that it would be better to remodel and rebuild the old structure and await the general election before the matter was submitted. Others, however, held that in view of the fact that the presidential election and other matters of importance would tend to show the proposition to the background, with possibly the same effect as amendment No. 5 met last time, when the prohibition amendment overshadowed everything else, and was really the cause of the new capitol amendment's defeat.

Advantages of a Checking Account

Over ninety per cent. of funds in business are made through the medium of bank checks, thus avoiding the dangers incident to carrying a large sum about, and the risk of making the wrong change.

This method enables the business man or individual to keep his money safely in the bank, instead of on the premises or about the person, where it would be subject to hazard.

A checking account at this bank is a great convenience and costs the depositor absolutely nothing.
