Kidnaps Sister

Mrs. May Morris, of Rombauer with her daughter, Ethel Whiffen, were attending the drummers meet at Poplar Bluff last week, and when they decided to purchase tickets to return to their home, leaving her daughter on the platform while purchasing tickets she was kidnapped by a sister, Mrs. Louise Smith, and later brought to this city and placed in the St. Vincent's convent. After the mother started a search she was rewarded with the information that her daughter had been kidnapped and brought here.

The mother swore out a warrant charging her daughter with abduction.

REBUILD CAPITOL AT ONCE.

The burning of the state capitol February 7 created an emergency which the legislature recognized. Acting under the constitution of the state, provisions were made for a special election to be held August 1 to meet this emergency by providing funds to rebuild the capitol building. Public-spirited citizens all over Missouri are rallying to the support of the plan submitted by the legislature. Missouri citizens really have pride enough in the state to want to see a splendid capitol building erected instead of needless delay, and it is very gratifying to know that the proposition is meeting with great favor at the hands of the people in every section of Missouri.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine"

CHAPTER XIV.

AFTER a few moments Valentine again glanced at the photograph of the dinner group. Next he opened a drawer at his left and took out a square green book with the legend "Scrap Book" in fancy green letters on its cover.

He placed the volume in a drawer at the right of his desk and on top of it laid several other books taken from another drawer. He slammed the drawer shut, straightened himself and walked across the office to the table on which was laid the tray of gold, silver and greenbacks.

"I'm going to beat you, Mr. Doyle," he said fiercely, half aloud. "I'm going to beat you, and I'm going to make you like it."

He seated himself before the tray and began counting the money as the door opened to admit Mr. Lane, followed by Detective Doyle.

Valentine looked up.

"Mr. Randall," began Rose's father, "this is Mr. Doyle, a detective, who has been asking me some questions about you that I feel you can better answer."

"Indeed?" looking at Doyle. "What is the name?" Valentine asked innocently.

His attitude made Doyle snort with anger.

"Doyle," the detective granted impatiently, starting at the man he had known as No. 1286.

Valentine rose and shook hands with Doyle. "Glad to know you, Mr. Doyle."

He seated himself before the tray. "Well, what can I do for you?" he asked.

The detective's mouth gaped open. He glared at the smoothly speaking, indifferently acting ex-convict before him, then at the tray containing thousands of dollars in bills and coin. Valentine went on counting the money as unconcernedly as though playing a game of jackstraws with Bobby or Kitty.

"What can you do?" exploded Doyle. "You can do nine years for—"

"You will excuse me," interrupted Mr. Lane, stepping toward the door. "I have no interest in the conversation. I am sure, and Mr. Doyle," he said pointedly to the bewildered detective, "I want you to thoroughly understand that I have every confidence in Mr. Randall, as also have all the other directors." The door closed be-

"I thought you'd duck when you got the wire." "Oh, did you send that telegraph?" "Yes, Jimmy." "Jimmy? What's the deal? I don't follow you." "Oh, you don't know, eh?" angrily. "Got the old boy—Lane—stalling for you, and you're going pretty strong, eh?" "Exactly what do you mean?" asked Valentine indignantly, rising as he spoke.

"Come on Jimmy, not with me. Sorry to tear you away from so soft a place, but the state of Massachusetts wants you."

"From the occasional words of intelligible English you speak from time to time," retorted Valentine easily. "I gather that you imagine I am a person named Jimmy." His words were accompanied by the most aggravating of smiles.

The now thoroughly irate detective bent toward the assistant cashier and peered intently at him.

"Imagine—imagine! Well, isn't it funny that I should imagine your name to be Jimmy?"

"It is, indeed," surely. "As a matter of curiosity, might I ask Jimmy's other name?"

"I'll give you just one guess," pointedly.

"That's exceedingly kind of you, but this same experience having happened before, I will likely guess it." He settled back comfortably in his chair.

"Well, what do you think of that?" Doyle found it difficult to control his temper.

"Well, what is the other name?" Valentine responded with the utmost coolness.

"You mistake me for a Mr. Valentine."

"Jimmy Valentine, the very name, and you are Jimmy Valentine, and I want you," snarled the detective.

"Now, is it come along or requisition?"

"Oh, I'm to be arrested for this Jimmy Valentine, am I? The last time I was mistaken for him I was only embarrassed by having a tough on the street in Chicago claim my acquaintance. You are really amusing, Mr. Doyle." The assistant cashier chuckled softly.

"So that's your game, eh?" "No game that I can see."

"I suppose you are going to deny that Bill Avery called on you today?"

Doyle watched the other intently to note the effect of this shot. But Valentine was entirely equal to the occasion.

"I do not know your friend Bill, Mr. Doyle," positively.

"No," exasperatedly. "Then a man with iron gray hair, wearing a top hat and carrying a cane, did not get off a train here today and come straight here?"

"It is not possible for me to know how the men get here who call on me. Such a man as you describe, however, did call on me. But that man's name was—er—er—"

He crossed to his desk, paused, glanced perplexedly at Doyle and then reached to the telephone.

"I forgot for the moment, but they likely will know outside. Hello! Do you recall the name of the last man who called on me today? No, not Mr. Doyle; he's here now. Cronin, that's it. Thank you." He hung up the receiver. "Cronin," he added. "He came in here a short time ago to negotiate a loan."

"GLAD TO KNOW YOU, MR. DOYLE."

"Cronin?" gasped Doyle. "So he's taken a new moniker, too, has he? And he came to negotiate a loan from Banker Jimmy Valentine? Well, if that isn't rich! I do wish Warden Hauller could be here today to hear you pull off this little stunt. I always told you you were too good for the safe-breaking game. You ought to be an actor or a United States senator. You're wasting your time in this business."

"I appreciate your compliments, but I really quite fail to understand you," Valentine spoke sharply. "Your attitude is trying my patience, Mr. Doyle. I am a very busy man, with huge responsibilities, and as this conversation is entirely frivolous and frivolous, I say I must regret to fully inform you that I must continue on my way."
