MODERN DAY MIRACLES

The Magic of Chemistry Which Makes a Compound of Value for One Purpose in War and Another in Peace

(Told in Eight Sketches) By JOHN RAYMOND

No. VII WAR AND PEACE

The art of warfare is as old as the race itself. Warfare at first consisted of throwing stones at the enemy or hitting him with a club.

The art slowly progressed. The catapult was used for hurling good-sized rocks and the bow and arrow served its purpose in stand-off combats. Thus it went for many centuries. Warfare consisted of ninety per cent hand to hand work and perhaps ten per cent of shooting from a distance.

Along about 1345 an old monk found that gunpowder when properly ignited, gave vent to a pretty good sized noise. England and France were at war and the new invention was tried out at the battle of Crecy with the result that the horses became frightened at the "noise like thunder." Losses were heavy and gunpowder was voted a success.

Warfare didn't advance greatly for centuries. To be sure many improvements in guns and explosives were made but the basic principle remained—the only way to put an enemy out of commission was to hit him with a projectile.

On the morning of April 22, 1915, warfare was revolutionized when a cloud of Chlorine gas was sent over the Allied trenches wiping out whole regiments. This experiment proved so successful that the war, opening as it did, 100 per cent explosive, ended 55 per cent chemical.

These war gases are of particular interest to the student of chemistry because of the variety of uses to which they are put in times of peace.

Phosgene, one of the most important of the war gases, has found a wider use in peace time than any of the others. It finds its most direct application in the manufacture of a large line of dyes, including blue, pink, violet, yellow and green. It is used in the manufacture of Coumarin, one of the essentials in making synthetic vanilla and perfume toilet soaps. It is also used in killing rodents, thus aiding in preventing the spread of bubonic plague. Phosgene finds another application in freeing certain sands used in the manufacture of optical glass from traces of iron.

Benzyl Benzoate was required for weather-proofing and fireproofing aeroplane wings in the war. It now finds an interesting use in making synthetic perfumes and synthetic drugs.

Dinitrophenol was supplied to the French High Commission as an explosive. In peace time we find it used in making dyes, including the American new sulphur black. This dye is interesting because it finds a wide application in dyeing such articles as hosiery and was one of the dyes that Germany was confident America could not make. It is gratifying to learn from textile manufacturers that American sulphur black is at least twenty per cent better than any German sulphur black they have ever used.

Chlorine was the first toxic gas used by the Germans. In peace time it is used in the purification of water, the bleaching of paper and cloths and in the manufacture of a great many dyes, perfumes and antiseptics.

Naphthalene was used in making our war-time daylight signal rockets. Now it is used in making such beautiful dyes as indigo and orange. From these few examples it will be readily seen why it is so simple a matter to convert a dye plant into a war-time production plant and why so many other industries are directly dependent upon dyes.
