FLOATING ANOTHER BOAT.

William York has again cast his "light canoe" on the created wave of Journalism, being now editor and publisher of the Steele Enterprise. In two ways Mr. York is now nearer home than he has been for a long time. In the first instance, Steele is the neighborhood of his first acquaintanceship with Missouri and Missourians, which dates back to the fall of 1894, about twenty-eight years. In the second place, he is nearer home in his work than he has been since he sold "The Hayti Herald" about seven years ago and became a wanderer on the face of the earth, going from place to place as a journeyman printer and linotype operator, following that ignis fatuus that leads after, but never to, the better perspective. All roads that he followed, like the needle of the compass, pointed ever the same course; hence his arrival at his starting point of over a quarter of a century ago. Steele, then in the woods, was the hunter's paradise, but little of nature is left to tell of those vanished days. With the disappearance of the tall and stately forest trees have also disappeared most of the pioneers, and the sound of the hunter's horn is heard no more. A verse that applies to another race and a far more ancient time, is also not out of place here:

"You say they have all passed away,
The noble race, and brave;
That their light canoes have vanished
From off the created wave;
That in the forest where they roamed
Is heard no hunter's shout,
But their names are on your waters
And you cannot wash them out."

After so far a journey, not always over smooth roads, the returned traveler's feet may be a little bruised, his hair a little hoar, and his heart a little sore, for those are the fruits that grow most abundantly by the side of the road of life. But the gathering of these mean knowledge, sometimes deeper love and sometimes a satisfaction that we could not otherwise have; for he who knows only the path from his cabin door to the spring and back has a narrow vision of this big, roaring, rushing, traffic-mad world that rolls on as we roll off into oblivion. So it is well, sometimes, that a man has traveled, has reached the end of his rope, has ceased to drag and has begun to dig, maybe at the very spot where he dug first, where his pick has lain and rusted through the years.

We note that Mr. York recalls that he floated over the townsite of Steele in a Mississippi river ferry boat in March, 1897, twenty-five years ago, to which the editor of The Missouri Herald adds his corroboration, though we were not one of the party to make the trip on that occasion from Pemiscot bayou to Cottonwood Point. We would say may it never happen again, but as we recall it now, "those were the days."

It requires no stretching of the imagination to realize that the world has rotated since then, and has whirled so fast that many of us have been slung off to disappear among the twinkling stars and the great silence that lies beyond. Those of us who are left have learned, let us hope, to clutch the tighter to our seats and dodge the tails of the comets and meteoric rocks with which we are incessantly bombarded.

We hope Mr. York will now be able to anchor his boat at Steele and, as Noah, after his voyage of the world's greatest flood, find a safe landing, and there begin anew the replenishment of the earth and his pocketbook. Noah did not set out for Ararat, neither did York for Steele. But—

"One ship drives East, another drives West,
As the selfsame breezes blow.
It's the set of the sail and not the gale
Which determines the way we go.

"Like the waves of the wind are the waves of fate,
As we journey along through life,
It's the set of the soul that determines the goal
And not the storm and strife."

WILSON REFERS TO REED AS A "MARPLOT."

Desires Missouri's Redemption From His Influence.

St. Louis, May 8.—Referring to United States Senator James A. Reed as a "marplot," former President Wilson, in a letter to Gov. Lon V. Stephens, made public today, asked the defeat of Missouri's senior senator to "redeem the reputation of the Democratic party."

It was Mr. Wilson's third letter on the subject of the Democratic nomination for United States senator, sought by Mr. Reed and Breckenridge Long, former third assistant secretary of state in the Wilson administration.

The letter was in reply to one by Mr. Stephens in which the former governor referred to a letter the former president recently wrote the St. Louis Globe-Democrat attacking Reed. Mr. Reed replied to this letter, in which he questioned Mr. Wilson's memory.

The letter under date of April 27, to Mr. Stephens, follows:

"My Dear Gov. Stephens:

"Your letter of April 22 has gratified me. I am glad to be sustained in my own judgment of Reed by your own knowledge of him and I shall hope and confidently expect to see him repudiated by the Democrats at the primaries. Certainly Missouri cannot afford to be represented by such a marplot, and it might check the enthusiasm of Democrats throughout the country. If their comrades in Missouri should not redeem the reputation of the party by substituting for Reed a man of the true breed of Democratic principle, I am sure your own great influence will contribute to the desired and expected redemption.

"Please accept assurances of my entire confidence in the Missouri Democrats and believe me, with best wishes,

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "WOODROW WILSON."

In a letter last week to John C. Higdon, a local attorney, Mr. Wilson asked Mr. Higdon not to "complicate the contest in Missouri by becoming a candidate for the nomination."

Mr. Long recently opened his campaign at Cape Girardeau and Mr. Reed opened his Saturday at Moberly.

In his opening campaign address Senator Reed defended his course and asserted Mr. Wilson was "the boy who is conducting the campaign in Missouri for the other side."

Senator Reed, when shown a copy of the Wilson letter, read it several times and said:

"I have no comment to make on this at present."

He declined to say whether a statement would be forthcoming later.

The first car to cross the "swamp road," known in the dry seasons as the State Highway, was a Chevrolet. It plowed through mud above its axles, and when it reached here looked more like a mud-turtle than an automobile. The driver of the car said he advised no one to take the trip unless they, too, possessed a Chevrolet.

The Sunday school class of Mrs. J. L. Dorris, Sr., entertained Miss Volla Matheny and her class of Sunday school pupils Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Dorris. Miss Matheny is one of the High School teachers who will not return next term, a fact much regretted by the pupils of the school and many friends.
