Monday Mr. J. P. E. Austin received a letter from Texas containing the sad news of the death of his oldest son (Pink) on November 23rd, 1890, in that state. He was riding a horse and the animal, in some way, threw Mr. A. against a tree and killed him. The bereaved ones have our sympathy.

If it wasn't for getting ourself in trouble we would suggest that those Charleston and Farmington lads and lasses who are disputing as to in which town the "coon hunting party" originated, quit their disputing and drown their animosity in the "ghost dance."

Judge Hamilton G. Wilson, one of the most prominent and well known citizens of this county, died at his home, at this city, on Dec. 31st, aged 54 years. Is it right that one man own homes enough for a million families, and a million families own no home at all? Is it right that a million families pay tribute to one man, in order to have a place to lay their heads? Or, in more forcible language, is it right that a million families be the slaves of one man? If not, how shall it be made better?—Exchange.

A hunter down in New Madrid county the other day took two kegs of powder in a skiff and started down Little River to his camp. On his way down the river a wild duck lit in the water ahead of him, and he shot over his two kegs of powder at the fowl. The fire from the gun ignited the powder in the keg, the man and skiff were sent whirling to the shore. There wasn't enough left of the man for a funeral.—A Southeast Mo. Exchange.

Another newspaper man has found cause to "klick" at society. What he says is true in almost every community. The Cape Democrat says: "Education and pedigree are no passport this season in this community to entertainments and balls given by our society people who class themselves as the "bear." Some scrubs attend these gatherings who would not be admitted to common scrub affairs and strut about as blooded society people. Queer world, this."

Last Saturday considerable excitement over a report of a supposed find of a pot of gold on the lot recently sold by W. F. Rodney to D. A. Glenn, existed among many of our people. It is said there was a pot of gold buried there during the war. On Saturday morning it was discovered that some one had visited the place the night previous, and prodded around with a sharp iron or stick, and an excavation was found, the bottom of which had the appearance of a pot having been taken therefrom, and near it an old iron lid. Whether a pot of money was found, it is impossible to say, but the prevailing impression is that there was. If it was found, the finder or finders will never divulge it, as it would cost them a good sum to maintain possession of it.—Cape Girardeau Cultivator.
