JOLTER.

Zalma

Farmers are so busy they almost forget to come to town until the close of the week.

W. E. Gray and son Buford, of Bloomfield were here last week visiting Mr. Gray's parents a few days. Bill informs us that he is a candidate for sheriff of Stoddard county on the democratic ticket.

Charlie Corbin, who recently moved his family to the Cape, is now again a resident of our town.

Uncle Jacob Slinkard is able to be out in town again.

Walter Gray has accepted the position as bookkeeper and paymaster at the office of B. Johnson Tie company at Zalma.

The good roads proposition is getting some boosters as well as kickers down here. People are beginning to look into real things for themselves instead of taking the other fellow's word for it.

Even though different from many of the readers in my political views, I feel constrained to express my admiration for the man who is now before the people awaiting their decision as to whether they will accept him as their servant at the gubernatorial head. He has zeal, integrity and the heart within him for the class of people that furnish the energy for national prosperity.

To provide a system, to mobilize and liquidize farm credits, securing to the farmer and the farmer alone, money on long time credits and at low rates of interest. When we hear the opinions of the greatest leaders in public affairs expressed, even of his opponents, that they consider the Land Bank Act not only the most constructive piece of legislation considered by the forty-eighth general assembly of this state, but the greatest legislative enactment ever had in Missouri, and that any farmer that didn't support it needed his sanity looked into. It makes me feel that Col. Frederick D. Gardner is the man to put at the wheel, who makes it his longing to do something in behalf of his state.

And if I were to speak for the community at large, I would feel safe in saying that citizens of Zalma and its surrounds are going to do their part to put him at the head of the ticket for the general election.
