BANK SAFE BLOWN OPEN

Mansfield was visited Tuesday night by bank robbers who blew open the safe in the Bank of Mansfield and secured about $1,500.

Entrance to the building was effected by prying open a window. Once inside the bank, an attempt was made to enter the vault by tearing down the brick wall, but this plan was abandoned and the lock of the vault was blown off with nitroglycerin and then the safe was blown up in the same way. It is surmised, the robbers taking nearly every cent in sight.

There were doubtless three explosions—one to blow off the vault, one for the outside door of the safe and one for the inside.

A tray in the safe contained some money but this was knocked out of position by the explosion and the robbers failed to take the money it contained. They also left $1 on the floor, a $250 gold piece in one sack and two quarters in another. They had taken the sacks of money to the counter and emptied the contents, leaving the empty sacks in a neat pile.

Julius Klich, who lives near the bank, heard a report about 1 o'clock Wednesday morning, and this was probably one of the explosions. Mr. Klich supposed it was some one shooting at a dog that had been barking and paid no further attention to it.

Others also heard a report but paid no attention, supposing it was some one shooting.

The work was evidently done by expert eggmen. Judging by the apparently deliberate manner in which they proceeded, the thieves must have taken all the time they wanted for the job.

The papers in the vault were strewn all over the floor and bloody finger prints on some of them showed that they had been handled by the safe blowers.

A blue handkerchief was found on the floor of the bank. This undoubtedly belonged to the robbers, but it is not thought that they will call and claim their property.

The night previous some tools had been taken from Signal Maintainer C. E. Cathcart's car on the Frisco tracks and some of them were found at the bank after the robbery.

The bank's loss of the money is fully covered by insurance, as the bank carries $3000 burglary insurance, which also covers the other damage done.

The robbery of the bank was not discovered until Wednesday morning.

Assistant Postmaster N. S. Miller, going home from the post office about 6:30 a. m., noticed the shutters at the bank window open and then saw the open window going up and looking in, he saw at once that the bank had been burglarized. He called up Cashier Geo. B. Freeman, who, with President G. W. Freeman, came to the bank at once.

Money for the transaction of the day's business was secured from the Farmers and Merchants Bank. The bank's customers also made liberal deposits and business was not interrupted.

The bank is using the safe of the Farmers and Merchants Bank until they get their new safe installed, which will be the latest model round and screw door.

Bloodhounds from Springfield were sent for. Upon their arrival they were taken to the scene of the robbery, but failed to pick up the scent.

It is to be hoped the desperadoes will be speedily caught and given their just desserts.

There is no clue to the robbers. A man who caused some comment by his strange actions was here the day of the robbery, and he was subsequently met by two companions. There are always so many strangers here, however, that it is impossible to do more than conjecture at present.

The Missouri Bankers Association, to which the Bank of Mansfield belongs, offers a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of each of the robbers.

The insurance adjuster was here today to adjust the loss.

This is the first time in the history of Mansfield that a bank safe has been blown up, and considerable excitement was created by the report that the bank had been robbed.
