Formerly of Mexico, a Masher—Mrs. Piddell Again to the Front—She Learned Nothing From Her Mexico Experience. Eye-painter, Cow-hider, Ktoper and General—H. Baker. The reader of the LEDGER will all remember Mrs. Piddell, who used to adorn the front of Ogilvie & Rolling's shoe store in this city, and at one time was the cause of adorning Len Baldwin's (catcher for the Mexico Browns) eye with a beer glass, and who also tried to adorn Ab. Dingle's good-looking countenance with a cow hide and then left Mexico for Moberly because the climate here did not agree with her complexion. She is still aising the devil, as the following from the Sedalia Bazaar shows: Thursday's Moberly Headlight contained a sensational article which detailed the alleged amours of a married woman and a youth of some seventeen years both of the city, but who are now in Sedalia. The Headlight says: "The M., K. & T. passenger train of yesterday, bound for Sedalia, contained, among other passengers, Louis Robert Wick, better known in Moberly as Louis Held, aged 17, who has resided in this city all his life, and who recently entered a barber shop as an apprentice. In the same seat with this M. Piddell, who is the wife of John Piddell, who has been conducting a bankrupt shoe store in this city for some time. But there is nothing especially remarkable in the fact that these two persons were passengers on the same train. Nevertheless it furnished abundant food for gossiping tongues, and in a short time rumors were afloat about the city concerning an intimacy which is said to have existed between the couple. In order to get the true inwardness of the departure of the young man, the Headlight reporter called on Mrs. Held, and was told this story: "Louis is not 16 years old yet, and about three years ago my boy, for some unknown cause, grasped a notion that Mrs. Held was not his legitimate mother and that he was simply an adopted son. When he informed Mrs. Held of his singular fancy, she, in a fit of temper, which she endeavored to make the facts plain to her son, telling him that Mr. Held was simply the step-father, but that she was his legitimate mother. The boy appeared cold and indifferently, however, and has since acted with anything but an affectionate air. About two months ago Mrs. Piddell, a woman of probably 30 years, moved into an adjoining house, and a more than ordinary intimacy at once sprung up between the beardless boy and the woman, who, as we have said, is a splendid performer on a French harp and Mrs. Piddell plays equally well on the guitar. They serenaded together, and the intimacy kindled to such an extent that Mrs. Held suspected what might eventually be the result, and gave her frequent words warning, which, however, was unheeded. During the St. Louis fair, Louis visited the "Future Gents," and Mrs. Held has reason to believe that he spent the greater portion of his time in the company of the woman, as they both returned together. This thing has been moving on for several weeks until yesterday, when Louis gave his mother to understand that he was going to shift for himself, and that he would not be troubled by Mrs. Piddell. Mrs. Held explained the evil that would certainly befall him, but to no avail. The boy arranged his wearing apparel, collected the money due him, and in company with Mrs. Piddell, walked to the depot, took the train, and are by this time in Sedalia. This is the mother's story. Last night a Bazaar reporter called at Mr. Piddell's store on Main street, near Ohio, and asked if Louis Held was there. "There he is," said Mr. Piddell, pointing to a smooth faced, boyish youth. The reporter drew forth a copy of the Headlight containing the above extracts, and asked Louis to read them. "I know what they are," said the young man, "and it's a lie from beginning to end." By this time Mr. Piddell, who was at the front of the store and his wife, the woman in question, were looking back to where the reporter and Louis were, and Mrs. Piddell took part in the conversation. "I never was so slandered in my life before," she excitedly exclaimed, "and I am going to make them pay for it." Mr. Piddell spoke sharply to his wife to remain quiet and let Louis tell his side of the affair. This Mrs. Piddell could not do long at a time, but would have her say now and then. "Louis' statement was to the effect that he first found out, his name was not Held, last Sunday, and that his father was still living, his home being at Norfolk, Ky. His mother had not treated him right and he felt he was not wanted at her home. He then determined to strike out for himself. He did not go to the depot with Mrs. Piddell, and when he went into the car where she was and told her where he was going, she took him back to his mother. This is refused to do. As to the St. Louis trip, he said that he went there with Mrs. Piddell, and was a guest of her husband's people. He was with young Piddell all the time. Mrs. Piddell corroborated this statement as did her husband. "I was very much excited, and I liked rapidly and with considerable emphasis. Mr. Piddell made a statement. He said that he lived next to the Helds in Moberly, in one of their houses. That Louis had often complained to him of his mother's treatment, and had frequently expressed his determination of leaving home. "I told him I would keep him here in Sedalia until he could find his own work, if he did leave, and I'll do it." "To what do you attribute this sensational story?" asked the reporter. "To spite on his mother's part. She was mad because Louis went away." "She hates me," said Mrs. Piddell. "I was forced to leave," said Louis. Considerable more was said by all parties, the sum and substance of which was a general and emphatic denial of any connection on the part of Louis and the lady for each other. "If I wanted to leave, I'd go with a man, not a boy," said Mrs. Piddell. It is clearly evident that Mr. Piddell has full faith in his wife, and that he is not only not jealous of this young boy, but that he proposes to

Men who scratch Marmaduke or Hutton are not Democrats. Romance with the Usual Villain who Still Pursued Her. From the following it would appear that we have done a great wrong to an innocent party, and we take pleasure in correcting our mistake. We published the item as we got it from what we considered reliable authority. The communication speaks for itself: To the Readers of the Ledger: We wish here to correct and firmly and stoutly deny a most scandalous item published in this paper some week back in reference to a Miss Belle Powell, of Moberly, living with a Mr. Fremont, as his wife. The author of this is without a doubt a notorious liar and a base woman from the very lowest degree in society, represented as coming from St. Louis. In correcting this error we will make a few statements concerning the character and relations of Miss Powell. She was born and raised right here in our midst and the uprightness of her character is known by hosts of friends and relatives of the very best respected families in our land. In order to make a clear statement to your readers I will present a little bit of romance, some might call it, but we would say a little sketch of devilry which was perpetrated by this wolf in sheep's clothing. The family of this young lady removed to Moberly some two years back, since when they have been keeping a boarding house. Here, with his handsome bearing and only a few months in the city, a gentleman named himself as a single man he was at once captivated, or pretended to be, by Miss Belle, and by his gentlemanly and gentlemanly behavior he soon won the good will of the family. In a few months an engagement took place resulting in the sudden appearance of a third party strongly protesting to be his wife, which he just as stoutly denied. The young lady to be sure dropped him glad to have escaped such a doom. But during this time she was in Mexico to visit her friends and relatives, in and around town. But this Mrs. Fremont supposing she had gone off with her husband, came to Mexico, and in a fit of jealous rage, she had this scandalous item inserted for the purpose of ruining this young lady's character, which, however, she can not succeed in doing, for, as I have said before, she has hosts of friends and relatives both here where she was raised and in Moberly, her present home, who will join in affirming that this young lady's character is as stainless as any in our land, and should the author of this be found she will undoubtedly be brought to justice. ALBIE M. COWAN. Democrats, don't scratch your ticket. Died, in Mexico, on the evening of Sept. 10, 1884, N. P. DeJarnatt, in the 60th year of his age. The subject of this sketch was born in East Virginia, and emigrated to this county with the family of his father, Dr. DeJarnatt, who was one of Audrain's pioneer settlers. Deceased was a consistent member of the Baptist faith, having united himself with Liberty church many years ago. His afflictions were very severe, and of the most painful character, but he was always in the most cheerful mood, placing his trust in Him who doeth all things well. All that a loving, dutiful wife, kind children and true friends could do to alleviate the sufferer was done in the most cheerful manner. It was hard for his loved ones to give him up, and they should try and fit themselves to meet him in that Great Beyond, where life is eternal and suffering is not known. A FRIEND. She went to the roller skating rink, and put the sliders on a strap or two about her shoe, and then she'd off and gone. She slid, she sloped, she glided, she glided, under fear or fetter; but at last the gentle maid was thrown—the roller skates upset her. Rufus Hisey is fast recovering from the knock he got on his head last week. Rev. James F. Smith is very ill at his home in this city, suffering severely from a carbuncle on his back.

It is hard to understand why we can keep no band in Mexico when other towns like Rush Hill keep a good band all the time. Ab. Dingle is in St. Louis buying a stock of groceries. Ab. and Os. are going to open a grocery store in Vandalia. They are clever boys and will do a good business. An oyster supper will be given in the basement of the Opera House for the benefit of the W. C. T. U. Every body invited. Mrs. P. W. Harding has our thanks for favors. Our young friends, W. T. They will be happy when the rest of the band, who are Republicans, have to blow with them to-morrow. To the Ministers of Mexico. DEAR BROTHERS—Paul said "Help those women who labor with me in the gospel." May I not ask of you: "Help those women who are ready to labor with you in a special department of the gospel? This temperance reform, under christian leadership, is true gospel work. It is to be classed with the Christian missions of the age. The fact that it is home missionary work should strongly commend it. They propose to do this work by disseminating Temperance literature, by arranging Bands of Hope and Juvenile Temperance schools and introducing temperance into the day schools and Sabbath schools, by influencing the press, by Prison work by Flower missions, &c. We have a department of young women's work. We have temperance parlor meetings by which we reach young men and other classes. We have thirty four departments of work—offered and equipped—thoroughly organized. Competent critics say it is a magnificent system by which to do the work. One prominent feature of the work is the holding of gospel Temperance meetings. We seldom do this unless the preachers conduct the meeting. In many places the ministers occasionally give up a Sunday night service, and all unite in this meeting. They accomplish great good. When the preachers will do this the Unions become a great power for good in the locality. Mr. Beauchamp's churches are always open for their meeting and he believes all preachers should co-operate in this work. My Christian brethren, the usefulness of the W. C. T. U. in this community is with you; can open the way for a great work or you can close it. But be assured if you foster this christian reform its reflex influence will come back with great blessings to you and your church. JENNY BLAND BEAUCHAMP. Vote the ticket straight from Cleveland to Baskin. Garrett & McCue keep constantly on hand a fine line of cigars and tobacco. If there is any man the Democrats miss at a time like this it is James Carroll, who was always to the front in any move for the good of the Democratic party. As long as there are any Democrats in Audrain—which will be always—the memory of James Carroll will be kept fresh and his tall form missed from the front of the parade. Vote the ticket straight from Cleveland to Baskin. The Prairie View missionary society will give an oyster supper at their church Thursday, November 6th. Proceeds for the benefit of the church. The press and public are cordially invited to attend. By order of committee. Mrs. S. L. McCord, Pres. Mrs. C. R. Gamble, Secy. The Republicans were short of cavalry—they only had nine mounted men in their procession. Geo. Robertson, yesterday in one half hour got 100 men who will be in the Democratic parade on horse back. There will be 500 cavalry. Vote the ticket straight from Cleveland to Baskin. W. L. Frost is in Memphis, Tenn., in the employ of a large cotton compressing company.
