of Trenton, former Bull Moose leader in north-west Missouri, and a candidate for Attorney General on their ticket in 1912, will be present and talk to you.

GEORGE E. HACKMANN
Of Warrenton, Republican Candidate for State Auditor.

The Memphis Democrat says that Senator Stone is President Wilson's most trusted adviser. Very good. But how about Senator Reed? He's not an adviser and certainly not trusted at the White House.

Most of the thirty thousand new federal jobs created during the present administration of economy, retrenchment, and reform are now filled by what Ham Lewis calls "lame and loyal sons of the South."

When President Wilson wrote to John Lind that if he couldn't force Hareta out by promoting the Carranza Villa revolution he "would resort to other means," just what means had he in mind? Could it be that this holy conservator of the peace intended to put the American revolution in Mexico? Yet what other means did he have in mind his furtherance of domestic secession in Mexico failed him.

Hessian Fly May Come out Later This Year.

The Hessian fly is very apt to come out later than usual this fall. Therefore prevent injury to the wheat crop this fall and again next spring by sowing the wheat on or soon after the fly free date for the northern border of Missouri is October 1, for the southern border October 18.

The dry hot weather of July and August did not kill the Hessian fly but kept it in its resting stage in the unplowed wheat stubble. The cool weather following the recent rains has also delayed the emergency of the fly, but they are now coming out slowly, and will continue to come forth to lay their eggs during the remainder of September and the first part of October.

By sowing the wheat on or soon after the safe sowing date, the plants will come up after nearly all the flies are dead, because the adult flies live only four or five days and during this time they lay their eggs and die.

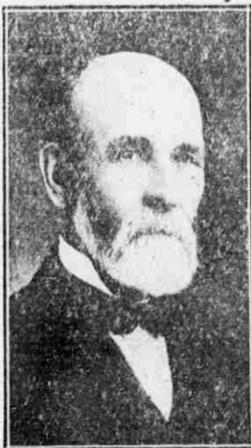

Prepare the seed bed well, keep working it and when the fly free date arrives sow the wheat as soon as possible. The plants will grow rapidly on a firm made well seed bed, will become established firmly in the soil, and will look as well or better than wheat that was sowed earlier. It will also escape injury by the fly during the fall and winter. And if all the farmers in the neighborhood sow on or after the fly free date there will not be enough flies living through the winter to damage the wheat next spring.—T. J. Talbert Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station.

It is said that Vance McCormick gave utterance to a great and exceedingly bitter cry when he read the declaration of Democratic State Chairman Harris that his gubernatorial candidate Judge Seabury, is 100,000 stronger than is Wilson in New York.

Are you preparing for early spring pasture? Early spring almost invariably finds us short of feed. How are you planning for that shortage? Early pasture will save expensive feed bills and help keep up the milk yield. A good fall and early spring pasture is rye or a mixture of rye and crimson clover. Early sown rye gives considerable feed in the fall but should not be grazed too closely or the plants may be winter killed.

The clover crop makes about half its growth during the last 30 days of its grazing period that is under normal conditions so that it can be heavily grazed during that time. This should allow the permanent pasture to get a good start before turning on it and it will be stronger and provide more pasture than if grazed early.

Late fall and early spring pastures means cheaper productions and larger yields. Plan on sowing some this fall.—J. G. Watson, Missouri College of Agriculture.

ARGUS COX,
For Judge Springfield Court of Appeals

Talking about appetite, those $4 66 meals that John P. Gordon ate at the expense of the state when attending a meeting of state auditors at Salt Lake City, Utah, would feed a whole family for three or four days.

Nothing with the semblance of single tax will ever pass the farmers of Missouri. The so called political land loan bank and its author, who hopes to ride into public honors on its fascinating title, are in that category and won't do.

The Republicans of Missouri have the strongest congressional ticket they have had in years because they nominated it to be elected and not merely to distribute postoffices. The voters who are for a restoration of the protective tariff must vote for these men, as well as for the Republican candidate for United States Senator and the Republican candidate for President, if they want to give direct expression to their views in their ballots. No state in the Union needs the protective policy more than Missouri. The people know it, but some of them, he'd to the Democratic party by the tradition of their ancestry, do not act on their knowledge and judgment.

The story that Col. Gardner is in the campaign as an advertisement for his coffin business is at least exaggerated. The coffin business isn't languishing just now.

Real prosperity involves one's ability to live well and accumulate a competence for old age. How many people are prosperous today?
