The Last Call Positively.

THOSE indebted to R. D. BREWINGTON, are requested to pay up. Such as do not by the 10th of May, will have to pay cost, if Old Joe charges any for doing business. R. D. BREWINGTON. April 28th, 1852—44*

From the Daily Journal.

Last night, as the Stage Coach was coming in from Glasgow, the horses took fright at some object, and attempted to run off. While reined up near the City Hotel, one of the horses, by a flash of lightning discovered a hole in the side walk—at it he plunged, and into it he went, but instead of the Bar Room he found it to be a cellar. But for the timely assistance of one of the proprietors, horses, driver, Coach and all might have been snugly stored away in the cellar for the night, where thier cries for help could never have reached the sympathizing hearts of the outsider. Fortunately, however, there was no serious injury done.

RAMBLER.

Last night was truly one of adventures. Some French gentleman or gentlemen, without leave, entered the pork house of Mr. Brittingham, on Bird, between Second and Third streets, and helped themselves therefrom to two hams only. It is believed that heretofore they have had free and uninterrupted access to the house by means of false keys; therefore they didn't care to take much at a time, as they could call again when that gave out. Such men ought to be closely watched by the city Police. Although the darkness of last night was almost total yet the flashes of lightning gave us a little light on the subject.

RAMBLER.

The Quincy papers are talking about "Hannibal men" and "Anti-Hannibal men"—Just as if there is a single citizen of Quincy who does not shake his fist at Hannibal every time he looks down the river. They need not talk about an Anti-Hannibal party. Such a party could not exist because it would have no opposition.
