NEGRO IN CAMBRIDGE.

SOUTHERN ANGER AROUSED AGAINST THE MASSACHUSETTS CITY.

A Black Man Is the Head of a School for White Children—The Negro Elected to Places Irrespective of His Color.

CAMBRIDGE, Aug. 31.—Cultured Cambridge has attracted considerable notoriety of late by the manner in which Negroes have been honored here. Southern news papers are denouncing Cambridge as a disgrace to the Union. One says that outside the university settlement there is little culture in Cambridge and that the majority of the inhabitants are themselves little better than negroes. But it is no new thing for Cambridge to favor the negro. No American community has so honored the negro as have the people of university city. Not only have they esteemed the black man as their equal for a half century, but they are doing it to-day. Twice has Cambridge been represented in the state legislature by negroes. In each instance the successful candidate resided in a section of the city where the vote of his race was relatively small.

Seven members of the common council have been of African descent. A negro is now at the head of the city department of bacteriology. Another is a member of the board of trustees that directs the conduct of the public library. A black man has been a member of the board of aldermen. Another has been chief of the fire department. He was the only man of his race then a member of city's fire fighting force. There is one negro policeman now in service. He has been in the department for nineteen year.

A black man has been commander of a white G. A. R. Post. A negro is principal of a grammar school in a fashionable section. Under her are six white teachers and several hundred white pupils. Best known of all Cambridge negroes is William H. Lewis, recently appointed by Pres. Roosevelt to be assistant United States district attorney for this section. Lewis first became especially prominent as a player on the Harvard foot ball eleven. His work as center rush on the team in the '90's has never been equaled by a Harvard man since.
