CARRINGTON YOUTH PROBABLY MURDERER OF FAMILY

Carrington, May 9.—That the bullet which ended the life of Anfield Shiflet, aged 24, fired by himself when cornered by a sheriff's posse that sought to arrest him for the murder of his father, Joe Shiflet, two weeks ago, ended a remarkable career of crime in which the young man's father, mother and a brother were killed, is the belief of

Foster county officials today. The elder Shiflet disappeared two weeks ago, his body being burned in a strawpile by his son. Two years ago, Mrs. Shiflet was found dead at the foot of the basement stairs in her home, killed by a .22 rifle. Anfield Shiflet was the only other member of the household on the farm at the time. Nine years ago, a brother, two years the senior of Anfield, disappeared, under circumstances much the same as those marking the disappearance of his father two weeks ago. Anfield was the last person with the missing brother, the family being east on a visit at the time.

Post mortem examination of Anfield Shiflet's remains, conducted at Harvey, revealed the fact that the man was insane, the physician testifying at the coroner's inquest this morning after a several days' inquiry had been found.

Young Shiflet shot and killed himself near Selz, Pierce county, where he had been located by Sheriff Morgan, after a several day inquiry had been conducted here.

The elder Shiflet disappeared two weeks ago, and evidence uncovered in the last few days served to fix responsibility on the young man. Anfield Shiflet and his father were bound for Carrington when last seen.

The following day, young Shiflet said his father had gone to Washington in the interests of a patent, by which young Shiflet declared it would be possible to deflect bullets from their course, making them pass harmlessly by the wearer of his invention.

On that same day, young Shiflet took a can of kerosene to a straw pile, some distance from the residence, explaining that he was going to burn the body of a dead horse.

Several times thereafter, young Shiflet visited the straw pile, each time starting a fire.

Neighbors then became curious, and their suspicions were communicated to the authorities. It was found that young Shiflet had dictated letters, addressed to himself, to a young man in Carrington, the latter writing them. These letters, now in the hand of officials, were ostensibly from the elder Shiflet, and were dated in Washington, D. C. They also were signed with the elder Shiflet's name, such signatures being forged.

Bones that were found in the straw pile are believed to be human bones. They were badly broken up, indicating that they had been handled frequently, and worked over in such a manner as to destroy evidence. The bones will be submitted to an expert. Last Friday, young Shiflet departed, going from here to New Rockford. He was traced and finally located near Selz.

When found by Sheriff Morgan, Shiflet was on a plow.

"What are you doing here?" asked the sheriff.

"Working—you don't want me, do you?"

"Yes, I think so. You haven't got a gun, have you?" responded the sheriff. "No," replied young Shiflet, as he leaped from his plow, and started running across the field. He had gone but a short distance when he whipped out a revolver.

"You won't take me alive," he declared, and continued running. The chase continued about two miles and a half, before the man was overtaken. As he found escape impossible, he stopped, turned and raised the revolver to his temple—discharging the shot. He died at a Harvey hospital shortly afterwards.

For some time, young Shiflet had been talking of his "bullet deflector," and declared a European power was going to pay him $250,000 for the invention. His father took much interest in the boy's plans, and seemed disposed to have considerable faith in him.

For that reason, the lad's story that his father had gone to Washington in the interests of the patent, was generally accepted for a time.
