ASSAULT CHARGE IS SUSTAINED

Beaver Creek Merchant is Found Guilty of Horse Whipping Boy.

Napoleon, N. D., Sept. 7.—Charged with assaulting a young lad named Frederick Bobb, Martin Dillman was arrested last week and brought to Napoleon, complaint being made by John Silbermangel. The parties to the trouble are residents of Beaver Creek, about sixteen miles south of here, the defendant being the proprietor of one of the stores at that place. He was brought before Judge J. Wellan, from which court a change of venue was taken to Judge Sherman's court. The testimony adduced was that Dillman had chased young Bobb from his store, in front of which he secured a whip from a buggy with which he thrashed the boy, chasing him over to the Sherie resident, where he desisted the whipping upon the appearance of Mr. Sperle. The marks made from the whip on the boy's body were exposed to the view of the jury. At the time of the assault young Bobb was accompanied by a friend named Getz, who also received a whipping. Dillman admitted giving the boy a whipping and claimed that he was justified in doing so for the reason that Bobb had become a general nuisance about his store, having at divers times done considerable damage, among which was turning the faucet on the kerosene barrel and allowing the waste of the entire contents, and that he had also put something into his gasoline tank which rendered the contents about 100 gallons—useless. No evidence was introduced by the defense to substantiate the story of Dillman, and the jury after being out about an hour returned a verdict of guilty, and the judge imposed a fine of $25 and costs, amounting in all to $32.55.

HOMEOPATHY

The following article entitled, "Germs," was written by Arthur B. Green of Wadsworth, Maine, for "The Society of Homeopaths." "Talking one day to a group of fellow-citizens, a learned member of a board of health was explaining the dangers that lurk in contaminated milk. The speaker was a prominent and successful physician of the self-styled "regular school," who prided himself, with all justice, upon his pains in keeping up to date and thoroughly informed. He was saying a good deal about typhoid. He told how it happens that typhoid fever is spread among people, especially in autumn, by the typhoid bacillus, and how this bacillus, really in two separate varieties, comes to be present in milk. He went over the familiar ground of contagion and contamination as related to typhoid, showing how it is that by tracing on the map the places where it breaks out, it is often shown what transmitted the disease. For instance, if frequent cases are found along a certain man's milk route, it is necessary to examine his milk and possible sources from which these bacilli could get into it. The speaker laid much stress on how easily typhoid is carried. To bring his point out more clearly he related this story: It appears that the public health records of New York show that a certain laundress who had come in contact with typhoid had become what is called an "active carrier." In other words, although she was not herself sick, she was full of bacilli, and those who wore the clothes she washed and ironed, those who ate at the same board with her were thereby exposed to the fever. In every house where she obtained employment, as the records show, some one developed it. The health authorities therefore concluded, and this speaker agreed with them, that the bacilli carried in the intestines of the laundress were the "CAUSE" of the spread of the disease. That appears a very plausible statement of the case. Indeed, with the authority of eminent and extremely earnest physicians behind it, there appeared a heavy room for question. But one of the listeners asked, with a rather puzzled look, why it was that the laundress herself was not sick, since she was so full of germs. The doctor confessed that he did not know; he could only say, that these cases of "walking typhoid" and apparently healthy "active carriers" did exist, and that "science" had shown us the menace they are to public health. In fact, they had locked up this laundress in quarantine and intended to keep her there until, by test of her intestines, they found her free from bacilli. But the inquisitive listener had not been so thoroughly satisfied as the learned speaker. He said that it appeared strange to him if these bacilli are the cause of typhoid, that according to the records less than one in ten or one in twenty of those who had been exposed by the laundress acquired the fever. "Why did they not all have it?" the doctor admitted, that was curiously true. It must be remembered, he said, that some persons have a high resistance to this particular disease than others, and that it was those whose resistance was high enough who escaped to another subject, but the inquisitive listener was still thoughtful. At length he spoke up once more. "Dr. ... may I ask you one more question about that active carrier of typhoid, the laundress? In some of any school of treatment, any effort being made to raise the resistance of those who contract typhoid up to the level of those
