A Home of Character

A Six-Room Bungalow

In this design the main roof is brought out over the porch with a gable and a certain unity in architectural effect is produced. The gables as they slope to the ridge project out from the body of the house, giving somewhat of a Swiss effect. The porch walls and columns, as also the chimney, are carried out in red brick, the body of the house in wide siding and the gables in vertical boards, all combining to make the bungalow very pleasing in appearance.

In this plan the living quarters have been arranged to occupy one side of the house and the sleeping quarters the other, with the entrance to the sleeping quarters off of the dining room. The stairs to the attic space are reached off of the dining room, and the basement, which occupies the rear half of the plan, is reached from a grade landing stairs out of the rear of the kitchen. The plan may be finished as the purchaser desires, but unless otherwise requested, oak floors will be used throughout on the main floor, hardwood finish in the living room and dining room and pine finish in the kitchen, bedrooms and bath. The basement has a cement floor and the attic is finished with a rough floor and intended for storage purposes only.

In the usual type of bungalow construction this design should be built for $3,600. Size 30x48 feet.
