OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES.

Teacher—Where do our most valuable furs come from, Willie?
Small Willie—From the fir tree.
"Johnny," said the minister, "can you name the three graces?"
"Sure," replied the little fellow. "Breakfast, dinner and supper."
Little Amelia was not feeling well, and the doctor was called in. "Can you describe your symptoms?" he asked.
"I ain't got no symptoms," she replied. "I've got a headache in my stomach."
Mamma—Howard, when you get to be the head of the family, what will you say to your children when they are naughty?
Small Howard—Oh, I'll do like papa does. I'll tell them how awfully good I was when I was a kid.
One day there was fish for dinner, and little Margie said: "Mamma, do you know what a shad reminds me of?"
"No, dear," was the reply.
"Well," said Margie, "it reminds me of a porcupine turned outside in."

NO BETTER PITCHING IN WORLD'S SERIES, SAYS DAMON RUNYON

Damon Runyon, the well known sporting humorist and baseball writer, says in The New York American this morning: "It is doubtful if any other game in the world series will see any better pitching than was displayed by Rudolph; it is doubtful if any game in any series will ever see better pitching, and the Bronx boy was pitching strictly to Stallings orders. He held Baker and Collins, and the other sluggers in the hollow of his oily glove.
Rudolph is a typical city boy; a product of the vacant lots of the big town. He is sophisticated and worldly wise, and game as a pebble. He would bet his season's salary on any proposition from a baseball game to spitting at a crack."

REHEARSALS ARE WELL ADVANCED

Polynesian Princess, by the Yeomen, Already Looming up Strong.

"The Polynesian Princess," which will be presented at the auditorium next week Friday, afternoon and evening, is strictly a North Dakota production. Its authors, who were first presented with the task of providing a musical comedy for a benefit performance, set out to purchase one, but found it impossible, so had to write one, the initial performance being given at Devils Lake, last February. Since that time it has been presented at a number of places in North Dakota, and according to press notices has met with great success.
In presenting the "Princess" to Grand Forks, the Yeomen Brotherhood, and especially the drill team, which is actively engaged in the advance ticket campaign, is satisfied that this city will see something entirely different in the line of home talent productions. 100 local people being used in the musical show. Rehearsals which have been in progress during the past week indicate that when the time arrives, the rough spots will all be worn off, and "The Polynesian Princess" will have the ear marks of professionalism, even though presented by home people.
The twenty songs of the musical score are all new to Grand Forks and will be sung for the first time in the local stage. Every number is a distinct hit, and all are of the catchy whistling-as-you-go-out order, making it difficult to determine which number is the feature song. The book which is based on college life, offers plenty of action on the part of the Rah, Rah boys, while the comedy is provided in the title role, which gives one of our local thespians an opportunity of female impersonation.
Two performances will be given in Grand Forks, the matinee taking place at 4 p. m., in order to give the school children an opportunity to attend. The advance sale of tickets has been unusually large even at this early date and the Yeomen anticipate that the coming event will be more successful than any previously attempted.

UNIVERSITY NEWS

GOOD CONVOCATION PROGRAM TODAY

Prof. Hult Spoke on Dr. Samuel Johnson—Fine Cornet Solo Also.

Prof. G. E. Hult, head of the Greek department at the university, this morning was the speaker at the regular convocation in the gymnasium. He gave a splendid talk on "An Eighteenth Century Stalwart," taking up the life of Dr. Samuel Johnson.
Another pleasing part of the program this morning was a cornet solo by E. Harold Wilcox. Mr. Wilcox rendered "Last Night," written by a Persian composer. His number was thoroughly appreciated by the audience.
In discussing his subject, Prof. Hult declared that Dr. Johnson is the noblest character of the eighteenth century. He stated that he was not a great poet, but a great character. He spoke of his many writings, showing wherein their value lies. Prof. Hult said that his great dictionary is a wonderful monument of self-help.
The speaker told also of the great hardship through which Dr. Johnson had to pass, and how he finally won a coveted place in Westminster Abbey. Prof. Hult's address was exceptionally fine. He showed that he is a great student of English literature. He has a wonderful choice of words and his English is of the purest kind.

SENATOR DEWEY ON THE WAR

Leslie's Weekly
I know, from personal knowledge, that both England and France desired most earnestly to avert war, and both did all in their power to prevent it. Apparently however, the military party which has increased in political strength every year since 1870, and which has the active enthusiastic support of the emperor's eldest son, the crown prince, has swept the emperor off his feet. He was deeply affected and impressed by the assassination of his intimate friend, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand; and apparently saw in it great perils to existing institutions. The purpose of the military party had been revealed in books like that of General von Bernhardi's, but no one thought them serious. Germany has three great classes: The industrial which has prospered so marvellously since the Franco-Prussian war; the intellectual, which commands the admiration of the world; and the Prussian military which is both militant and reactionary, but controls the policy of the empire. Its aims are reducing France to a German province, and pouring the marvelous earnings of the French people into the military chest, and the acquisition of Holland and Belgium. This would give Germany fortified forts along the English channel, its whole distance, and enable Germany to dispute the control of the channel and the mastery of the seas. It might also be possible to carry across the narrow belt of water a half-million of soldiers, thus fulfilling the dream of Napoleon to conquer Great Britain.
Copenhagen, Oct. 9.—(Via London)—A German fishing vessel has been blown up by a German mine in the Langeland belt, north of the coast of Denmark. The captain was killed but the rest of the crew were saved.

Don Moore Stages An Impromptu Stunt At Y. W. C. A. Reception But Loses Quarry After Wild Chase

Don Moore believes that at last he has found his true line of work.
Up to the present he has thought that as secretary of the Grand Forks Fair association he was filling as useful and lucrative a job as a reasonable man could expect.
But now that is changed.
Don is going to send in his application for a job with the Keystone Comedy "Movie" company.
He discovered his ability last night after a purely impromptu stunt which made any comedy chase ever seen on a local screen seem like the Stabat Mater dolorosa in comparison.
The whole adventure began when Don came out of the Y. W. C. A. building last night where he had been attending the open house, and found that his automobile which he had left outside was missing.
"Ding bust it," said Don peevishly to a couple of boys who were sitting on the steps of the building, "where's my buzz wagon?"
"Dunno," said one of the youngsters, "a bunch of kids took a benzine buzzy that was standin' here a few minutes ago. Maybe it was yours."
"Here's where I find her in the ditch somewhere, I suppose," said Don mournfully, but hardly were the words out of his mouth when the machine in question came careening madly around the corner, loaded to the gunwale with a cargo of kids.
As it stopped in front of the "Y" Don made a mad dash down the steps in the effort to catch one of the riders red handed, but the youngsters were too quick for him, and disappeared in all directions over the surrounding streetscape.
"By Heck, I'll catch one of 'em anyway," said Don grimly to himself, and lit out in pursuit of the boy who appeared to have been steering the car.
It was some chase. Down the alley went the kid with Don in hot pursuit. Arriving at the back stairs leading to the Y. W. C. A. rooms the youngster did a quick turn and dashed up.
Within the reception was in full blast. Cake and grape juice were being dispensed to the assembled ladies, when there was a sudden noise from the rear like the coming of a healthy young tornado, and a streak of light dashed madly through the rooms, making his exit through the front door.
Scarcely had the assembled company recovered from its surprise when with a redoubling of the racket, in burst Don. He was puffing like the exhaust on No. 1's locomotive on a heavy grade, but was navigating at a good 20-knot speed.

Don didn't stop for any social repartee, but kept right on going on the trail of his wary enemy. On reaching the bottom of the front stairs, however, he saw the kid's rear elevation disappearing up the alley, and having run out of gas was compelled to stop.
He sat down on the stairs and mopped his fevered brow, while several of the ladies who had finally decided that neither of the intruders was a dangerous lunatic, or afflicted with hydrophobia, came down to ascertain what the rumpus was about.
"Why, it's Mr. Moore," exclaimed one sweet young thing, as she got a good look at Don's countenance. "It must have been a joke to amuse us."
"Oh, Mr. Moore," she continued, coming up to Don who regarded her with a wary eye. "You were just too funny for anything."
"Oh—was I?" stammered Don, scarcely knowing what to do in the face of this flank attack.
"Yes indeed you were," continued the fair one gushingly. "Why, you were better than anything I've seen in the movies since I don't know when. Why was your legs—"
"Good night," said Mr. Moore firmly and departed in search of his returned machine.
GREAT GERMAN GENERAL—Cut General von Hindenburg, commander of the German forces in East Prussia, is holding in check an overwhelming army of Russians under General Rennenkampf, who is straining every point to break through the German lines. It is reported that the Kaiser himself is in the field in East Prussia and that the czar, believing that a decisive battle in this section of the German empire would mean an end to the war, has also taken the field.
COL DURLAND DEAD.
London, Oct. 9.—Colonel Jeffrey Hale Durland, who arrived here recently in charge of the Red Cross work in connection with the Canadian troops, died suddenly today.
Winthrop Ames, director of the Little Theatre, announces that he will produce Alice Brown's play, "Children of Earth," which won the $10,000 prize offered by him for the best play by a native author, about Thanksgiving.
