CERTIFICATE IS SAVING GRACE

London, Nov. 3.—Christian Hallstrom, secretary of the Olympic games in Stockholm 1912, when traveling recently in Germany and Austria on behalf of a London company of whom he is now manager, was several times arrested as an English spy. Once in Austria, when waiting on a railway platform, the officials were quite sure Mr. Hallstrom was an spy and the crowd had already started aggressive behavior toward the Swede when he dug out of his luggage a certificate of the Order of the Red Cross, which was conferred upon him after the games. This certificate also on later occasions proved still more useful and efficient than did the royal Swedish government's passports. Mr. Hallstrom is now in London again.

NARROW ESCAPE STORIES ARE MANY

Coolness and Bravery Under Fire also Brought Out in Letters.

London, Nov. 3.—Many narrow escapes made by the injured British and Belgian soldiers now recovering in English hospitals. A young lance corporal of the King's royal rifles, who is recovering from a bullet wound in his knee owes his life to a crucifix which he picked up in an empty house where he was hidden.

Private W. Hinton of the first east Lancashire regiment, the luckiest man in the army. He was hit by three bullets with the third without serious injury. One bullet flattened the rim of ammunition in his belt. Another smashed the magazine of his rifle and a third passed through his cap. A letter from one of the royal engineers describes the remarkable pluck of Lieutenant R. Pottinger of the 2nd Buffs. Pottinger and his section were attempting to blow up a bridge under fire. They laid the charge and the section retired. Lieutenant Pottinger and a sapper remained behind to light the fuse. The charge did not explode. The sapper then fired ten rounds of ammunition at the charge without success. Pottinger then said "I'll make the thing go off." He shook hands with the sapper and walked to the bridge. There he put the muzzle of his revolver into the charge and fired. The charge exploded and the men had to flee leaving the bridge intact. If the charge had gone off before Lieutenant Pottinger had disappeared completely, but the approaching Germans would have been robbed of an easy entry into the allied territory.

One of the officers on the ill-fated Cressy which was sunk by the German submarines was severely injured on the head, had both his legs broken and his feet crushed as he was thrown into the air by the explosion. His body was sucked under the water by the sinking cruiser, but was picked up by one of the rescue ships.

Twenty-four hours afterwards the injured officer regained consciousness and his first words were: "Are we down-headed?" The line was made adjutant for his coolness and bravery in one of the engagements in Lorraine. From the front line the sergeant was sent across an open field to attract the fire of the Germans so the colonel could tell where the enemy trenches were and what their probable position was. The sergeant was directed at the four men. They made their way to a small farm house where they climbed up on a tile roof and from the chimney a chimney began firing at the Germans. Angered by the impudence of the four soldiers the Germans opened one of their batteries on the house and the sergeant was killed.

"My smartest patrol leader is gone," the colonel remarked, as he saw the building crumble. The three privates were no more, but the little sergeant was soon seen running across the field toward his command. When the sergeant arrived breathless at headquarters the colonel asked with mock severity why he did not stay to continue the fire. "Sorry, sir, but the pigs knocked my house down," was the reply.
