I Must Away to Wooded Hills. I must away to wooded hills and vales where broad, slow streams flow cool and silently.

SILK EXHIBIT NEW FEATURE IN THE NATIONAL MUSEUM AT WASHINGTON

Miss Helen Stuart of the National Museum and frame with silk worms on it.

Washington, July 6.—A great attraction at the National Museum is a nest of silkworms at work. Imported to show school children and others how silk is made, they have been very busy.

The worms were placed in the Museum when about twenty-four days old and were fed on mulberry leaves for several days until they were fully mature and were ready to spin their cocoons. A statement issued by the Smithsonian Institution. At this time several racks and trellises were placed in the case, to which each worm anchored his cocoon. All during the week these spinning worms have been busily engaged in wrapping about themselves their filmy threads of silk in preparation for their metamorphoses. When the cocoons were all completed they were collected and the chrysalides inside stifled so that the emergence of the silk moths later would not spoil the silk strands. These cocoons will be placed on exhibition with the other material of this exhibit.

First Step of a Series. The case of silk worms represented the first step in a series of exhibits showing what silk is, how it is manufactured and many samples of the various finished products derived therefrom. This section of the division of textiles takes the museum visitor for a tour of instruction in silk—literally from the worm which makes the silk to the finished silken gown. It includes samples of nearly every kind of fabric manufactured from silk in this country and abroad. Various sorts of cocoons are shown from several countries, together with many implements, and some apparatus used in the care of the worms themselves and the mulberry trees on which they are fed. Certain of the special implements and tools used in the cleaning, combing and reeling of the silk from the cocoons are also to be seen. The finished products in many purposes, yard-dressed and piece-dyed fabrics, wash silks, prints, jacquards, velvets and scarfs, ties, ribbons and veillings.

Preserved Specimens. A case of preserved specimens shows the cycle of life of this industrious little animal. The egg of the silk moth is about the size of the head of a small pin and hatches in about ten days' time into a tiny worm. Its growth from this minute form takes about a month, during which time it develops into a worm about 3 1/2 inches long and 3/4 of an inch in thickness. Upon reaching its maturity the worm stops feeding and begins to crawl about the trellises in search of a place in which to spin its cocoon. In from two to five days the cocoon, composed of a single thread between 300 and 700 yards in length, is spun.

Reeling the Cocoons. Within the finished cocoon the silkworm sheds his skin and passes into the pupa or chrysalis stage. If the cocoon is not put through a 'stoving' or stifling process, which kills the chrysalis inside, it will become a grayish-white moth in two weeks more and push its way out of the cocoon. Such procedure, however, is allowed only when silk moths are needed for breeding purposes, since in emerging the moth pushes through the head and legs, after having moistened it with a secretion which tends to rot the fibre, thus rendering it useless for reeling and of value only for spun silk.

Reeling the Cocoons. In order to reel the cocoons they are first immersed in boiling water, and brushed to rid them of the loose outer filaments. The true thread is then unwound almost to the chrysalis, but the inner lining is far too fine to be reeled, and is used, with the outer waste, in the manufacture of spun silk.

A single cocoon strand is too fine for commercial use, and is therefore combined with several others to make a single thread of reeled silk. One pound of sixty reeled silk will reach a distance of about 180 miles.

The moths desired for breeding are allowed to break their way out of their cocoons, and, after mating, lay from 300 to 400 eggs, dying soon after, having completed their life cycle.

Outside of its lesson on the technology of an important industry, the silk exhibit, with its living complement of spinners, presented a fine natural history lesson to the small children, and a graphic illustration to the older ones, especially to those of the sewing classes in our domestic science departments and schools.
