

WHAT THEY ARE DOING IN SOCIETY

The Home-Returning.
Tis we who live that vagrants are;
The dead are not our outcasts for our love,
But rather
The seeking souls who earlier have Spent
To where friends gather.

AFTERNOON SUIT

Misses Geraldine and Ernestine Jacob, 136 Reeves avenue, were hostesses this afternoon when they entertained a company of girls at a 1 o'clock luncheon complimentary to Miss Gladys Mayer, who will wed Dr. Charles O'Keefe of Saco, Mont., on Saturday, October 2.

A distinctly dressy afternoon suit of black satin and velvet is the model shown here. The coat is particularly striking and distinctive. It is cut away in front, fitted with a circular back and is bound by bands of velvet at the edges. It is fastened with one button at the waistline and three buttons at the neck to give the coat a high neck effect.

DEATH TAKES LAST OF TRIBE

Kil-so-quah, Indian Woman, Was 105 Years Old—Ends Miami Line.

Huntington, Ind., Sept. 21.—The long line of full-blooded Miami Indians or the reigning fairly ended with the death of Kil-so-quah, granddaughter of the famous chief, Little Turtle, at her home a few miles east of Roanoke. The princess was 105 years old this year. May being as closely as the month of her birth can be fixed. Her children, Anthony Revarre and Mrs. Mary E. Johnson, are one-fourth French. Only the son was with the princess when she died.

With Kil-so-quah was buried the bones of her second husband, Antoine Revarre, a French-Indian trader, who died in 1849. At the request of the princess, her physician, Dr. S. Koonce, many years ago located the bones, disinterred them and kept them in his office awaiting the death of Kil-so-quah. The princess' first husband, John Owe, a Frenchman, died shortly after their marriage.

Mrs. Johnson, the daughter, went to Indian Territory many years ago and married an Indian man, who was a veteran of the civil war. Her mother lost trace of her until a few years ago, when Mrs. Johnson applied for a pension, and a newspaper article brought a reunion. The daughter visited Kil-so-quah a year ago.

A public ceremony marked the burial of the aged Indian. Miamis from over northern Indiana attended. Last of Pure Blood. As the granddaughter of Little Turtle (Mi-shi-kin-now-kwa), whom J. P. Dunn, in his "True Indian Tales," describes as the greatest Indian the world has known, when measured by the standard of achievements, Kil-so-quah was a figure of national prominence in all affairs relating to the Indians. She was the last pure blooded representative of that branch of the Algonquin tribe known as the Miamis.

To make her the most interesting individual of the race, the telling of which might lessen the burden of voluntary ostracism. Lived Lonely Life. Typifying the tragedy of an almost extinct people, her own words, translated by an interpreter, tell more poetically than all the descriptions that have been written of her life in the years since her husband died.

"When I am busy I think of my work; when I am idle I think how poor and alone I am." Kil-so-quah, or, as her name is spelled in Indian records, Ki-so-Kwa, was the daughter of Little Turtle's son, Wok-shi-gah. In English the Crescent Moon. Her mother was Nah-wah-mo-kwa, the Snow Woman. The translation of her own name, On the Setting Sun. She married Antoine Revarre, a French Indian, and of the children born to them, Anthony or Wah-pi-mon-gwam, and

His love of good living as for professional skill, called upon an eccentric nobleman, who was just beginning a most elaborate dinner. After a while, receiving no invitation to join his lordship, the medical man said: "Now, sir, if I were in your place, I should say, 'Pray, doctor, do as I am doing.'" "So sorry," said his lordship, "Well, doctor, do as I am doing, go home and eat your dinner!" (Tit-bits) Herald Want Ads. Bring Results.
