

ALLIES TAKE LIQUOR BEFORE GREAT CHARGES

Nurses from Front, Visiting Here, Say Germans Crucified Canadian.

ACT AVENGED IN SAME WAY

Tweeten Sisters of Crookston Tell of Awful Conditions at the Front.

That the soldiers of the allies are frequently "filled up with booze" before they make a charge against the Germans is the contention of Miss Ida and Hilda Tweeten of Crookston, Minn., who spent several days this week at the home of Miss Thora Hagen, Belmont apartments.

The Tweeten sisters gave their service during the past year in France as nurses with the American ambulance corps in a camp 30 miles from the firing line. They returned to this country a month ago, landing in New York May 3.

Germans Also "Prepare." That the Germans also are given all the liquor they can drink before making an assault upon the allies is also said to be part of the program in the western theater of war.

Under these conditions the most terrible acts have been committed, according to the Tweeten sisters, who declare that in one instance a Canadian soldier was crucified by the Germans. They state that the Canadians retaliated by crucifying the next German that fell into their hands. Several instances of the resourcefulness of the Germans is also pointed to. The British had been receiving large consignments of canned food for the soldiers, but this practice had to be stopped when it was discovered that the Germans used the empty cans they found in captured trenches as shrapnel.

Shrapnel is Terror. A clean wound from a rifle bullet is not so much feared, but the shrapnel makes a dirty wound which easily becomes infected.

The most wonderful surgery is being practiced at the front, especially in cases of head wounds. As many as ten operations have been performed successfully on one man, bones being repaired and transferred from one portion of the body to another. The French helmets are proving of great value for head cases.

Nurses Wear Masks. The use of gas masks by German gas at the front is terrible and the results have been fearful, according to the sisters. They state that the approach of the German gas was detected by a sweet and pleasant odor. Then it is that the gas helmets and masks come into play. Even the nurses wear masks.

The charging at the front has been terrific, they state, asserting that the Scotch are the best with the bayonets. Despite the bravery exhibited at the front the wounded soldiers have a great dread of returning to the firing line, it is said. As soon as they recover sufficiently from their injuries they are returned to the scene of battle.

Experienced Air Raid. The Tweeten sisters experienced one of the German Zeppelin raids over Paris.

They tell of the patience of the wounded English "Tommys" and the gratefulness with which they receive every little attention. The wounded are receiving the best of care, they aver.

In speaking of the comfortable manner in which the Germans are living at the front, they state that the officers even have pianos in the trenches.

The Tweeten sisters assert that they do not intend to return to Europe, but that they would be glad to offer their services to Uncle Sam in the event that this country should ever become embroiled in war.
