REPUBLICAN FANATICISM.

Here is what the New York Herald said of Lincoln shortly after his first nomination:

"HERALD," May 19, 1860.—The Republican Convention of Chicago has nominated Abraham Lincoln, of Illinois, for president of the United States.—A third-rate western lawyer, poorer even than poor Pierce. * * * The conduct of the republican party in this nomination is a remarkable instance of small intellect growing smaller. They pass over Seward, Chase and Banks, who are statesmen and able men, and they take up a fourth-rate lecturer who cannot speak good grammar, and who, to raise the wind, delivers his hackneyed, illiterate compositions at $200 apiece. Our readers will recollect that this peripatetic politician visited New York two or three months ago on his financial tour, when, in return for the most unmitigated trash, interlarded with coarse and clumsy jokes, he filled his empty pockets with dollars coined out of Republican fanaticism."

This same paper is now trying to belittle Bryan his campaign. What was "Republican fanaticism" in 1860 is "anarchism" in 1896. Further comments are unnecessary.

A distressing accident happened at Dassel Saturday afternoon, when an old soldier was struck by the special train carrying Mr. Bryan and was instantly killed.

Lommen and Johnson divide the time at the meeting at Irving this evening with Henry Feig, the republican candidate for the legislature. The two men just one minute to decide to consent to the debate.

Certificates of nomination have been filed for all the nominees at the county conventions except Haselton for Co. Com. and Highstrom for Surveyor.

BRYAN AT WILLMAR.

Willmar people have had the great honor and privilege of seeing and hearing a real presidential candidate. The day after our last week's paper was in the mails a message was received that Mr. Bryan would speak here enroute from Fargo to St. Paul. The news were hastily spread in all directions and it was confidently expected that Willmar would see the largest crowd in her history. But the elements seemed to conspire against us, and during all the day previous to the day of the meeting a heavy rain fell which continued during the night and in the morning, making roads well nigh impassible and traveling disagreeable. It had been the intention to make some decorations on the front street, but the wet weather made this impossible. A platform had been erected near the depot and for hours before the train was expected the crowd at the depot kept growing larger and larger.

The band arrived early and played selections now and then while the crowd waited. The Sioux Falls train brought in two extra coaches loaded with passengers. A Mr. Babcock who came with the Litchfield delegation was introduced and made a short pithy speech. Roy E. Sperry began an address but when he had fairly become warmed up on his subject the train came in sight and the band struck up an air. A minute more and William Jennings Bryan, in all probability the next president of the United States, was facing the crowd and speaking. We will let the Minneapolis Times reporter tell the rest of the story:

At Willmar a drizzling rain was falling and the atmosphere was raw and cold. A platform had been erected at the depot and around it some 2,000 people had gathered to pay their respects to the presidential candidate and listen to his words. In the crowd were many yellow badges, of which a number were worn by little boys. It was the first place at which the yellow ribbon had been conspicuous by its presence.

Ascending the platform, Mr. Bryan was introduced by Dr. Christian Johnson as "the people's candidate for president." Standing beneath a huge wagon umbrella held over him by a solemn visaged youth Mr. Bryan spoke in part as follows:

"There is no emergency that ever arises in this country that the American people do not rise to the occasion. We have reached a crisis in our American history and the American people are rising to meet it. For years the gold standard people have insiduously instilled their pernicious policy into the framework of legislation, while outwardly claiming to want bi-metalism. They have covertly and secretly manipulated matters so as to have the gold standard permeate and fasten its fangs upon the institutions of the country, and you see the result."

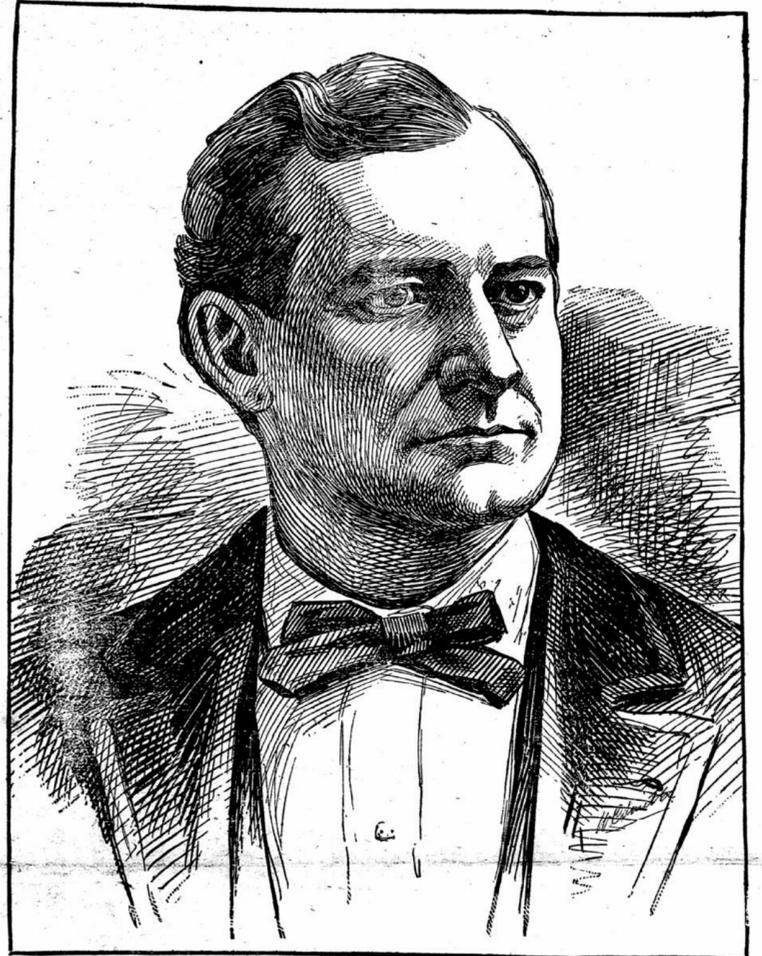

Mr. Bryan then related a number of anecdotes that were highly entertaining to the silver portion of his hearers, but not quite so funny to those who wore the yellow ribbon.

"One thing I have noticed," said he, "and that is that the man who thinks the condition of the farmer is good enough is the man who does not farm. And he is the man who sits in his bank and loans out his money at a good rate of interest. Is there any farmer here who thinks his condition is good enough?"

"No, no," exclaimed a hundred voices and a great deal of shouting was done as the speaker replied: "I thought not."

Mr. Bryan then went on to tell of the evils arising from the gold standard and was often interrupted by applause.

He Came, He Saw, He Conquered!

WILLIAM J. BRYAN.

TO WILLIAM J. BRYAN, ESQ.

Bryan, I love thee? Aye, thou art a man!
Raised up of God to stand for common weal.
I would to God that common folk who feel
The throbb of thy great heart, as sure they can,
In sympathy, would be non-partisan
And bold enough to stand by thee; and deal
To tyrannies a stern rebuke; and seal
The doom of all monopolies; and fan
The fires of brotherhood.
If so, ah then
Couldst thou lead on to certain victory,
Would God that strength be given the laborer
To turn his back on bribery, and when
The day shall come, a ballot cast, to be
Of freedom's cause the trenchant arbiter.
Minneapolis, Sept., '96. M. D.

As he stepped from the platform he was presented with a handsome bouquet daintily tied with tri-colored ribbon.

From the platform of the coach Senator Howard made a few brief remarks and Chairman Rosing also addressed the crowd.

At 3:50 the train pulled out for Litchfield, followed by enthusiastic shouts for Bryan and some aggressive calls of "McKinley."

We have not been able to get the full stenographic report of his speech here in time for this issue but we expect by next week to be able to give it. Mr. Bryan's pleasing and sympathetic face made a deep impression on those who saw him, and his words, few as they were, sank deep into the minds of those present.
