 NOTES and COMMENT

Thoughts at the Beginning

 Measured by a century's span how short and insignificant do not the peri-of the big woods the Sioux Indians were the only inhabitants thereof. It is not more than thirty-one years since the first store was built in Willmar. Since those early trying days 1280.00 of the pioneer another generation has 1860.63 grown up which knows naught of those days except what they have heard and read relating thereto. The changes that occur in a decade are stupendous; those of a century cannot be grasped by the human mind, however much the finite but conceited understanding of men may assume to do. Penned within the confines of a little sphere, subdivided by prejudices and distinctions, what knows man of his own time? We are not competent to judge of what occurs in our own time, much less can we realize the changes wrought since our grandfather's time. We have progressed, we believe. What is progress? Is it discovery? Is it rapid accumulation of wealth? We do things more easily now than 225.00 our grandfathers did. How much better off are we on that account? Do we work less? Do we worry less? Do 4000.00 we live longer? Do we enjoy life in a greater degree? Are we any the wiser when we are ready to leave the world? Our astronomers teach us theories. A new telescope sweeps all away as cobwebs are swept from the ceiling.

New theories are formed. How long will they survive? Specialists discover new methods of harnessing energy. We ride faster. We read the gossip of the world each day. We have better artificial light. Do these things make us contented?

Great advances are made in medical science. Discoveries are made daily. But is the race more robust than the people of the eighteenth cenury? Is there less sickness? Is there less misery? These and other thoughts owd upon us. What is true progress? Who will answer? Is it not that which will conney through life? What progress has been made in the Christian virtues. the greatest of which is charity? We virtues, but in true adherence to them.

The good book says: "Though I speak with the tougues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. "And though I prophecy, and understand all myster-

have all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so I could re-there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. "For we know in part, and we pro phesy in part.

since the message rang out: "Peace on earth, good will to men." How much progress has been made? We who are living today speak very flippantly of what has been accomplished in the last century and what may be accomplished in the century just begun. The century will yet be young when most; of us are gone and a younger generation is at its prime. Possibly a few who lay in their cradles a hundred years ago are yet alive, but they do not live in this century. They still exist, but they live in the past. They live in the forties, fifties and sixties when their life's work was accomplished. We will begin the century, others will continue it and still others will close it. It remains for us of the present generation to make the most of the short time mite in the march of true progress. Having disposed of my business ine ests in tows I will sell my Real Estate at bargain prices. 50x150, with residence, on Litchfield
