Quack Grass Can be Killed.
 A great many of our farmers are under the impression that when quack grass once gets a hold on a field there is no hope of ever being able to use that field for any other crop. This is a mistaken idea, for it has been proved that quack grass can be eradicated. The men who will be the Farmers' Institute have gone into this matter, both on their own farms and then the experience of others and will tell what they have found out about killing quack grass. One thing is true, there is no short cut to clean fields when quack grass gets a start. It takes good thoro work and plenty of it to get rid of a quack grass patch. Those who are fortunate enough to have no quack on their farms will do well to be put on the subject of getting rid of it so that when it does make its appearance they may prevent its spreading and doing great damage.

Clover.
 It has been said that if all clover be properly cared, timothy and all other hay would have to leave the market. Whether we believe this or not, we all know that clover is the coming feature in the agriculture of Minnesota. While all have a vague idea that clover is something great, very few understand it thoroughly or appreciate as they should its wonderful value, not only as a feed for all kinds of live stock but as an enricher of the soil. As fast as a farmer comes to understand more thoroughly this wonderful plant, just so fast does he become a more prosperous farmer. Men who have made a life study of the clover plant and have had a life's experience with it will talk and answer your questions on it at the Farmer's Institute. This one attraction alone will well repay any farmer for the time and effort spent to get to the meeting.

TUBERCULOSIS NOT SUFFICIENTLY TAUGHT IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
 Only Small Percentage of Children Receive Proper Instruction.

Definite instruction concerning the nature and methods of prevention of tuberculosis is being given to less than 6 per cent of the public school children of the United States according to a bulletin issued today by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Recent investigation has shown that in only nine cities, Washington, D. C., Dallas, Tex., Richmond, Va., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Detroit, Mich., and Knoxville, Tenn., are special text books being used or lectures being given about tuberculosis. In three states and one territory, Michigan, Massachusetts, North Carolina and Porto Rico, laws have been passed requiring that instruction about the nature and methods of prevention of tuberculosis be given in all public schools. In Tennessee, the state department of education has requested that such instruction be given, and has issued circulars for 600,000 children would be reached. While tuberculosis does not cause as many deaths among school children as it does among working men or among infants under five years of age, the National Association gives some figures to show how serious the disease is among this class. Based on the census of 1900, it is estimated that nearly 100,000 children now in school will die of tuberculosis before they are eighteen years of age, or that about 6,400 die annually from this disease. Estimating that on an average each child who dies of tuberculosis has had six years of schooling the aggregate loss to the country in wasted education each year amounts to $1,162,000. According to investigations made in New York, Boston and Stockholm, the percentage of children who are afflicted with tuberculosis is much larger than the death rate would indicate.

The National Association for the study and prevention of Tuberculosis declares that there are two ways of checking the ravages of tuberculosis among school children. The first way is to instruct every school child about the dangers of the disease, and to show them how they themselves may prevent tuberculosis in their homes. The second method is to establish open air schools for all children who have tuberculosis or who are suspected cases, segregating them from the healthy children.
