SYNOPSIS.

Frank O'Connell, young Irish patriot, is shot and wounded by British soldiers while making a home rule speech. He is aided by Angela Kingsnorth, an English society girl, who defends him.

Angela takes O'Connell to her brother's home and helps to nurse him. He recovers, and she and the girl become fast friends.

O'Connell when well is sent to jail for disturbing the peace. He finally writes Angela that he has finished his sentence.

O'Connell and Angela wed. She has espoused the Irish cause. Her brother, a member of parliament, is very angry.

The happy couple come to America to live. A daughter is born to them. Angela's brother refuses to help the couple in any way. Angela dies.

O'Connell names his daughter Margaret and calls her "Peg." O'Connell receives a most important letter from England, which perplexes him.

O'Connell allows Peg to visit England at her uncle's request. The elder Kingsnorth's heart had finally softened toward his dead sister's little girl.

Peg goes to the home of the Chichester family in England, in the direction of Mr. Hawkes, Kingsnorth's attorney, as Kingsnorth suddenly dies.

She first meets Ethel Chichester and her husband, a married man in love with Ethel. She interrupts them by accident in a secret meeting.

Ethel is enraged at Peg and haughtily dismisses her from the drawing room, sending her to the servants' quarters. Chichester has lost their money in a bank failure.

CHAPTER XVI.
"I'd be happier with my father."

"SOMETHING may be saved from the wreck," reasoned Mrs. Chichester more hopefully.

"Until I get really started," said Alaric with a sense of climax.

Mrs. Chichester turned to her daughter. "Ethel!"

"Whatever you decide, mamma," Mrs. Chichester thought a moment, then decided. "I'll do it," she said determinedly. "It will be hard, but I'll do it." She went slowly and deliberately to Mr. Hawkes, who by this time had disposed of all his documents and was preparing to go. A look in Mrs. Chichester's face stopped him. He smiled at her.

"Well?" he asked.

"For the sake of the memory of my dead sister, I will do as Nathaniel wished," said Mrs. Chichester, with great dignity and self-abnegation.

Mrs. Hawkes breathed a sigh of relief.

"Good!" he said. "I'm delighted. It is splendid. Now that you have decided to do so happily there is one thing more I must tell you. The young lady is not to be told the conditions of the will unless at the discretion of the executors should some crisis arise. She will be to all intents and purposes your guest. In that way we may be able to arrive at a more exact knowledge of her character. Is that understood?"

The family stammered several and collected their wits.

"And now," said the lawyer, happily at the fortunate outcome of a situation that a few moments before seemed so strained, "where is your bell?"

Alaric indicated the bell.

"May I ring?" asked the lawyer.

"Certainly," replied Alaric.

Mrs. Hawkes rang.

Alaric watched him curiously. "Want a sandwich or something?"

Mrs. Hawkes smiled benignly on the unfortunate family and rubbed his hands together self-satisfactorily.

"Now I would like to send for the young lady—the heiress."

"Where is she?" asked Mrs. Chichester.

"She arrived from New York this morning, and I brought her straight here. I had to call on a client, so I gave her your address and told her to come here and wait."

At the word "wait" an uneasy feeling took possession of Ethel. The word was used by that wretched little creature who had so rudely intruded upon her and Brent. Could it be possible—

"The footman entered at that moment.

"Is there a young lady waiting for Mr. Hawkes?"

"A young lady, sir? No, sir," answered Alaric.

Mrs. Hawkes was puzzled. What in the world had become of her? He told the cabman distinctly where to go.

Jarvis opened the door to go out when a thought suddenly occurred to him. He turned back and spoke to the lawyer:

"There's a young person sitting in the kitchen—came up and knocked at the door and said she had to wait until a gentleman called. Can't get nothing out of her."

Hawkes brightened up.

"That must be Miss O'Connell," he said. He turned to Mrs. Chichester and asked her if he might bring the young lady in there.

chester. "Bring my niece here—at once!"

The wretched Jarvis departed on his errand, muttering to himself: "Wait until they see her. Who in the world could tell she was their relation?"

Mrs. Chichester was very angry. "It's monstrous!" she exclaimed. "Stoopid!" agreed Alaric. "Doocid stoopid."

Ethel said nothing. The one thought that was passing through her mind was, "How much did that girl hear Brent say, and how much did she see Mr. Brent do?"

Hawkes tried to smooth the misunderstanding out.

"I am afraid it was all my fault," he explained. "I told her not to talk—just to say that she was to wait. I wanted to have an opportunity to explain matters before introducing her."

"She should have been brought straight to me," complained Mrs. Chichester. "The poor thing!" Then with a feeling of outraged pride she said: "My niece in the kitchen—a Kingsnorth mistaken for a servant!"

The door opened and Jarvis came in from the room. There was a look of half triumph on his face as much as

"I can't stay here."

"Why not?" asked the lawyer.

"I'd be happier with my father," said Peg.

"You'll be quite happy here—quite."

"We're not wanted here, Michael!" she murmured.

The terrier looked up at her and then buried his head under her arm as though ashamed.

Jarvis came in response to the ring at that moment, bearing a pained, martyr-like expression on his face.

Mrs. Chichester directed him to take away Peg's parcels and the dog.

Peg frightenedly stretched the terrier.

"Oh, no, ma'am," she pleaded. "Please love Michael with me. Don't take him away from me."

"Take it away," commanded Mrs. Chichester severely, "and never let it inside the house again."

"Well, if ye don't want me inside yer house ye don't want me inside yer house," Peg snapped back.

Hawkes pleaded.

"No!" said Peg firmly. "I will not give him up."

The lawyer tried again to take the dog from her. "Come, Miss O'Connell; you really must be reasonable."

"I don't care about being reasonable," replied Peg. "Michael was given to me by my father, an' he's not very big, an' he's not a watchdog; he's a pet dog—an' look!" She caught sight of Ethel's little poodle, and, with a cry of self-justification, she said:

"See, she has a dog in the house—right here in the house. Look at it!" And she pointed to where the little ball of white wool lay sleeping on Ethel's lap. Then Peg laughed heartily.

"I didn't know what it was until it moved."

RAYMOND NEWS.

E. R. Olson of Willmar was here on business Wednesday.

Gilbert Kingsted was a Willmar visitor Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Manska and son, Kenneth were Willmar visitors Monday.

Mark Somerville loaded his household goods, money and shipped them to Willmar, and on Tuesday left with his family for that place where they intend to make their future home.

Mr. Somerville has purchased a three acre tract of land with buildings for which he paid $2,200.

Louis Hirman, while out autoing last Sunday, the car caught fire from the over heated exhaust pipe passing thru the dash board.

Mr. Hirman when noticing a volume of smoke coming up, stopped the car and checked the flames, and in doing so he had his right hand badly burned but otherwise little damage was done.

Mrs. Chichester Was Angry; Ethel Said Nothing.

to say: "Now, who would not make a mistake like that? Who could tell this girl was your niece?"

He beckoned Peg to come into the room.

Then the Chichester family received the second shock they had experienced that day—one compared with the failure of the bank paled into insignificance. When they saw the strange, shabby, red haired girl slouch into the room with her parcels and that disgraced looking dog they felt the hand of misfortune had indeed fallen upon them.

As Peg wandered into the room Mrs. Chichester and Alaric looked at her in horrified amazement.

Ethel took one swift glance at her and then turned her attention to Peg.

Jarvis looked reproachfully at Mrs. Chichester as much as to say, "What did I tell you?" and went out.

Alaric whispered to his mother: "Oh, I say, really, your know—it isn't true! It can't be."

Peg suddenly saw Michael and began to bark furiously at him. Michael responded vigorously until Peg quieted him.

At this juncture Mr. Hawkes came forward and, taking Peg gently by the arm, reassured her by saying:

"Come here, my dear. Come here. Don't be frightened. We're all your friends."

"I can't stay here."

"Why not?" asked the lawyer.

"I'd be happier with my father," said Peg.

"You'll be quite happy here—quite."

"We're not wanted here, Michael!" she murmured.

"Last Call" for Seed-Corn Tests. Every farmer in Minnesota who plants corn this spring is going to test his seed corn. Some farmers will test theirs before putting it in the ground, others will test theirs in the fields. Those who test before planting will stand a good deal better chance of a profitable crop than those who test by planting in the field.

All of one's seed corn should be tested for germination before it is planted. Sometimes on account of improper curing, handling or storing, not a single seed in an entire ear will germinate. It takes only from 16 to 20 ears to plant an acre of corn. If one ear is wholly bad, therefore, a considerable part of the acre is unproductive. It pays, therefore, to test one's seed corn.

The individual ear tests requires a rack or other device to hold the ears to be tested, and a box for the test. Any kind of a rack in which one can place ears of corn in regular order and number them will do. The germination box should be 24 inches square and 4 inches deep. It should be filled with moist sand or sawdust to within 1/2 inch of the top, then Canton flannel cloth, which has been marked off into 2 inch squares, should be placed over the wet sand or sawdust. Each of the squares is numbered to correspond with the numbers on the rack. Ten kernels of corn are then taken from different parts of ear No. 1 (except from butt and tip) and placed in square No. 1 in the test box. Similarly 10 kernels are taken from ear No. 2 and placed on square No. 2. This is continued until each square has its ten kernels of corn.

Then a moist Canton flannel cloth is placed over the seeds and the box is placed in a room where the temperature is from 60 to 70 degrees Fahrenheit. If moist sand or sawdust is not scattered over the cloth, the cloth should be kept moistened. The cloth, however should not be kept too wet. At the end of the sixth day the top cloth may be removed by rolling it back carefully. It will then be seen at a glance which ears have not sprouted well, and these can be thrown aside. At least nine of ten kernels should germinate strongly. Moreover ears that show only poor or weak sprouting should not be used for seed.

Before the final shelling of seed corn, the butt and tip kernels should be removed, in order to prevent irregularity in the size of the kernels, which makes it impossible to plant with uniformity.—Agricultural College Bulletin.
