The "point" is a place which a great many people claim to see, but very few care to get to. They will travel all around it, but to go right through to it, to make an attempt to arrive at it, is quite beyond them.

The singular thing about this is that everybody is urging them on to do it. "If you will only get to the point," says the world, "it will be an immense help." Then all the psychologists, sociologists, theologians, orators and humorists declare they are going to immediately.

The point laughs at them all. "I'm safe!" says the point. "You'll never get me!"—Life.

Some of these facts we will not be able to throw away after carrying them home, and they will be a source of much good. Let us boost for a greater advancement in farm life and work, and for more co-operation.

Both speakers were well appreciated by the audience, which were large. Three sessions were held on the week Friday and Saturday, Feb. 18 and 19, at New London, were both practical farmers.

That care, selection, and breeding are the stepping stones to success in dairying, and that the common cow should not be ignored. Pure breeds are generally too expensive to begin with, so go easy and grade up gradually.

That clover growing, crop rotation and live stock farming enriches the soil. That more can be made from grain and live stock combined on the same number of acres than from grain alone.

That there is money in potato raising in northern Minnesota, if you stick to it; and that you have to stick to any kind of farming to win out.

That dairying is one of the most paying farming propositions in Minnesota. And that the improvements in the home and in the kitchen are of more importance than a fancy cattle barn.
