P. A. puts new joy into the sport of smoking!

YOU may live to be 110 and never feel old enough to vote, but it's certain—sure you'll not know the joy and contentment of a friendly old jimmy pipe or a hand rolled cigarette unless you get on talking-terms with Prinze Albert tobacco!

P. A. comes to you with a real reason for all the goodness and satisfaction it offers. It is made by a patented process that removes bite and parch! You can smoke it long and hard without a come-back! Prinze Albert has always been sold without coupons or premiums. We prefer to give quality!

Prinze Albert affords the keenest pipe and cigarette enjoyment! And that flavor and fragrance and coolness is as good as that sounds. P. A. just answers the universal demand for tobacco without bite, parch or kick-back!

Introduction to Prinze Albert isn't any harder than to walk into the nearest place that sells tobacco and ask for "a supply of P. A." You pay out a little change, to be sure, but it's the cheer-fullest investment you ever made!

CHAPTER XXIV.
Pleading For a Life.

FEW evenings later Abner Daniel was walking after supper on the grass in front of Trumbley's house. It was his usual bedtime, but he had no inclination to sleep. Mary had been his company for more than an hour, and they had been talking of their work and all of Howard's trouble, but she had slipped into the house, and he was left to the grim problem alone. Sud- denly at the head of the road he saw a figure of a man come into view, and toward him with what seemed an uncertain, hesitating step, looking more closely, Abner recognized Fulton. Seized by a sudden impulse toward fresh air, Abner stepped to the gate and said, "It advanced boldly toward me."

"I have a lump of fear and sur- render the latter turned and was about the spot when Abner uttered a reassuring laugh. "Huh! I scared he chuckled. "I didn't mean to."

"I dropped my tobacco at the foot of oak oak" was down on my all ready to find it. "Which way are headed at this time of night? Late out to be out, ain't it?"

"Wasn't goin' nowhere," Abner replied simply.

"The blacksmith's shop in the edge of this mornin' the fellow that was in the bellows. Abe, said you'd passed along an axed of he'd seen. Was it anything particular you got?"

"You blinked helplessly."

Prepping Yourself Well

DRIVING OUT CATARRH

If people knew how the presence of catarrh is a constant menace, they would have none of it. It costs some part of the delicately adjusted body and makes it useless, more than their share of work. It affords a carefully prepared seedling that has done up the whole system, this involving many organs and debilitating the entire body. Catarrh is easily neglected, and when it gets well on its way, it is a proper medicinal correction. For a proper medicinal correction, a valuable tonic with special action on the catarrh conditions. The aim is to clean out the matter, to dispel the catarrhal inflammation and to get the whole system. Its users willingly testify that it has done up the whole system for catarrhal sufferers. What has done is the best proof of its value. You may rely on it. The tablet form is pleasant to take and easy to administer.

It is the ideal laxative and liver tonic. They have a purgative effect and do not form a habit. 10c, 25c, 50c.

The Peruna Co. Columbus, O.

"No, I—I didn't want nothin'," he said haltingly. "Nothin' at all. I was jest wonderin' if you'd passed along. I—"

"The voice died away. Abner looked toward the full moon and stood stroking the bristling, week old beard on his chin.

"Oh, I'll bet you did want to see me," Abner said. "You are jest a little backward an' slow to come to a thing. Abe, I used to be that way myself till politics, tradin' hosses, an' one thing or other learnt me that I wouldn't do."

The man offered no denial, and of this Abner made a mental note.

"I did want to see you," he blurted out. "I hadn't been right in my mind here lately. Sometimes I don't know what I'm sayin' or doin'." My wife has noticed it an' called my attention to it several times."

"Ah, he is goin' to own up an' claim mental unsoundness," Abner reflected, while a sudden glow of hope suffused him. "It's shurely enough to know that it will strengthen his claim." Then aloud to Fulton, he said: "A man ain't accountable for what he does when he's that way, Abe, especially if he's all keyed up in pity over somebody bein' harmed or wronged—some helpless person that he hated to see suffer."

Fulton seemed so much absorbed over what he was now bent on saying that Abner's words fell on closed ears. "I was havin' one of my worst spells 'fother evenin' when you was out lookin' for yer hoss, or been feelin' so hot that I drunk too whisky just 'fore you come. I thought that would clear up my mind, but I tuck too much. I drunk mighty nigh a pint, all told. I was jest gittin' under the influence of it when I was talkin' to you, an' after you left I was plumb soaked. My wife overheard the ramblin' way I was talkin' to you, an' when I come in—or it was the next mornin', when my mind was clear—she told me—she told me she had never heard anybody say such ridiculous things in 'er life."

"Ridiculous?" Abner's heart sank in sheer dismay over the unexpected stand the man was taking. "Ridiculous? Did you say ridiculous, Abe?"

"Yes, an' I've been tryin' to remember what it was I did say that night. I think among other things, we talked about—"

"Yes, we talked about Craig an' Howard Thinsley," Abner went on fiercely, for the course Fulton was taking had upset one of his best hopes. "You said you was sorry for the boy—you said he'd done you favors, an' you seemed to think, though I didn't fully agree with you at the time, that Howard was tellin' the truth."

"I may have said it," Abe went on insistently, keeping his desperate gaze on a wheel cut rut in the road, which he was nervously kicking with the toe of his course shoe. "I don't git full often, but when I do I slobber over an' sometimes cry about the least thing. My wife said I cried about Howard when I got to bed after you left that night an' said he was bein' treated wuss'n a dog. That was odd, too, for I don't know a thing about the case. I reckon Howard is as nice as the general run of boys, but everybody knows he has a hot temper an' 'arm hisself an' went lookin' for his man."

"Yes, he has a hot temper," Abner was speaking at random in an effort to get his bearings. Never before had he felt his ingenuity put to such a bewildering test, and his hope of rescuing Howard was becoming less and less as he realized the safe ground Fulton now stood upon. Was it possible that the wits of a man of this low type could defeat his own?

"I'm goin' to quit drinkin', even fer my health," Abe went on, the glare of a half insane man in his eyes. "You must 'a' thought I was a plumb idiot that night, an' I must 'a' been actually full of liquor."

"I didn't smell it on you, Abe. I was bothered about my loss an' the hard work me an' Mary have on our hands in the office. You can have no idea how awful it is to be in such a tight place as me'n here are in."

"I remember a little bit o' what I said—jest sort o' like a dream, you know, Mr. Daniel. I think maybe I talked about—about my cousin Susy Thomas an' her trouble. Bein' out o' my head that way an' Craig bein' so much talk about—about Craig's bad reputation with women, I reckon I got the pore gal mixed up with him some way in my silly mind. She did have trouble like that, but a young feller I knowed about that used to run as brakeman on the W. and A. road was the one that was to blame. He deserted her all right enough, an' run away somewhere, I—I must give the devil his due, an' Craig, with all that said agin' 'im, ortn't to be blamed with— with another feller's deeds."

"I see, I see," Abner said, helplessly. "But she did—she did, I believe, that you got word back from Texas that the pore gal died out there."

"There was just a hint of hesitation, as if he was trying to stand in court might show in the desire to make an accurate statement, then:

"Yes; she died—she did die out there, Mr. Daniel, but it was from weak lungs—consumption. It was in her family. She was always puny-like."

"Then the operation you mentioned?" Abner suggested. "She didn't die from that?"

Again Fulton deliberated before speaking. Finally in response to Abner's steady stare he said: "I don't know that that was any operation, but some folks that was in a position to know said that the young feller did give Susy some concoction or other that wasn't good fer her an' may have hurried the pore gal to 'er grave. I don't know, I know, though, that I'm goin' to let whisky alone hereafter, Mr. Daniel, an' I won't do when it plumb upsets a man like I was that night. I didn't have any sense at all. For in stance, you know, I couldn't recall exactly when it was that I last seed Craig 'fore he was shot. I made two different statements, one on the heels o' 'other. I said once that I was at the new wire fence at Craig's an' then at my pigpen at home, but now that I'm plumb sober an' got all my senses I remember that it was at my pigpen that I last seed 'im."

"I see, I see," Abner said gently. "An' I reckon it was to straighten out all this that you was inquiren' about me at the blacksmith's shop, Abe?"

"Yes, I thought I'd git it straight 'er in across you an' had a talk."

"An' I reckon it was to straighten out all this that you was inquiren' about me at the blacksmith's shop, Abe?"

voice when he next spoke.

"This is a sad, sad old world, Abe," he began. "I've been in it a long time, an' I ain't seed much else but trouble on every hand. I wish I could be a good man, but I can't always manage it. I'll feel better tonight, you about I make a clean breast to you about some'n I done. You may think it is a small matter, but it ain't to me. I actually lied to you 'tother night. I intimated I thought Howard was guilty, in tryin' to do a little good—in tryin' to find some way to help that pore stricken boy an' his heartbroken mammy. I dropped into my old tricky way o' talkin' that I acquired when I was younger an' traded a lot with keen feel- ings that had no conscience an' killed what little I had. The truth is, Abe, that I was so anxious to find out if I could throw any light on the matter 'tother night that I led out by accusin' Howard myself. I saw you was friendly to 'im, an' I knowed that 'ud set you to talkin', an' it did—you know it did."

Fulton laid his playing hands on his knees to steady them, but he kept his eyes averted. "I didn't know you was feelin' like that, Mr. Daniel; but I did after I thought it over," he said, huskily. "Then I seed yore hand, an' got ready fer you, 'er, the truth is, Abe, that I was so anxious to find out if I could throw any light on the matter 'tother night that I led out by accusin' Howard myself. I saw you was friendly to 'im, an' I knowed that 'ud set you to talkin', an' it did—you know it did."

"You are right, I ain't got no proof, Abe," Daniel returned sadly.

Daniel paused a moment.

"Well, Abe," he continued, "I'm here to say that I am convinced that folks can't keep on doin' wrong, even if they try. The very laws of the universe are agin' it. Every day you pick up a paper an' read how some feller has toted crime on his soul fer years an' run away an' finally come forward of his own free will an' dumped it off in open confession. Abe, yore ma is dead—passed on—hain't she?"

"Yes," slowly drawled Fulton. "She died when I was a boy."

"She was a good woman, I'll be bound, Abe. Wasn't she?"

"Yes."

"Do you know what I think she is, Abe? She's some'n's what God's light is brighter 'n it is here. Who knows, she may be able to come nigh you an' throw her holy influence about you? Bein' more like Iota than she was here on earth, she may have glorie in the pity you had fer your pore cousin o' yore'n that was so weak an' ill treated. She may have thought that yore great wrath agin' Craig was beautiful and even divine. She may have felt that in your mind you done was an agent fer good—fer we know that God hisself condemns such creatures an' scourges 'em with the lash of conscience; but, Abe, Abe, listen to me. The spirit o' yore ma may be uneasy now, fer she sees you waverin' on the brink of a lastin' wrong. She sees you under the greatest temptation o' yore whole life, an' no doubt she's afraid you won't be strong enough to resist. She knows that you know an innocent young feller is sufferin' fer some'n he never done, an' fer all we know she be standin' here at this minute pleadin' with you the best she kin not to take a false step. It may be her that's makin' me say this to you, Abe. It is fer you to decide. You kin walk straight ahead into God's light, or you kin stumble on into the devil's darkness."

Unselfish Mother Love

Mother Love is one of the most sacred things in the world. It prompts the mother to give her strength—her life even—gladly—happily—that her child may be safer, happier, stronger or better in every way.

Just a food—specially prepared to aid in making red blood and strong healthy tissue—is what she needs. Then all the natural functions of the body will be easily carried on without the least sense of fatigue or drain. With plenty of red blood in her veins, mother will feel no ill effect from nursing baby.

HEMO will aid mother in supplying baby with a quantity of good quality milk and at the same time improve her general physical condition. When it is impossible to nurse the baby, secure the food most nearly like mother's milk by asking your druggist for Thompson's Food (Perpetinized).

We suggest that you try a 50c package with our guarantee of satisfaction.

Maxwell

The world's record—twenty-two thousand and twenty-two miles without stopping the motor—is held by a Maxwell stock touring car.

NO other car at any price has ever approached this wonderful record of endurance.

In addition to this proven sturdiness, remember that the Maxwell averages between 25 and 30 miles per gallon of gasoline.

Moreover, the Maxwell is complete. It has electric starter and lights; demountable rims; one-man mohair top; speedometer; roomy, comfortable seats and an attractive appearance.

Are you particular about details? Do you demand evidence of value? If so, you will investigate the Maxwell, the features, record and reputation of which proclaim it the world's greatest motor car value.
