When Bathtubs Were Curiosities.
The British Medical Journal asserts that a century back the English were a dirty people. England can hardly have been worse than the French. In 1713 Jean Baptiste de la Salle published "Les Regles de la Bienveillance et de la Civilité Chre'tiennes," a manual for the guidance of youth, which has run into over fifty editions and is still in print. We are told that "for the sake of cleanliness it is well to rub the face every morning with a white towel in order to remove the dirt. It is not advisable to wash with water, for this exposes the face to the chills of winter and the heats of summer." This precept continued to appear in the manual until the edition of 1782.

Trapped.

The Old Time Skipper.
Inmates of the wardroom on an American man-of-war often allude to the captain as the old man or the skipper. The latter is not, as many suppose, a slang term, but a sound word, of excellent etymology and valuable as carrying within itself an interesting bit of commercial history. Skipper is simply shipper, and it comes down from a time when every commander was as well part owner of vessel and cargo, or, literally, the shipper. There are still local shipyards along the Atlantic coast, some of them the outgrowth of private yards, where the "vessel owners" of years ago built their own ships to carry their own and their neighbor's crops to market.

Strength of Fish Glue.
In a recent test of the strength of fish glue, says the Popular Mechanics, a pull of 6,030 pounds was required to separate the halves of a one inch wood end block that had been cemented together with this adhesive substance.

KEEP ON LEARNING.
No matter whether it be little or much, learn something every day. One of the greatest satisfactions in this world is the feeling of enlargement, of growth, of stretching upward and onward. No pleasure can surpass that which comes from the consciousness of feeling one's horizon of ignorance being pushed farther and farther away; of making headway in the world; of not only getting on, but also of getting up.

That's So.
"I'm a lover of nature."
"Me too. She tints the woods red and yellow without any help from you. Now if you want a fence painted you gotta do it yourself."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Spartacus.
Spartacus was a Thracian of noble birth. While serving as an officer in an auxiliary corps of the Roman army he deserted, and, being apprehended, he was reduced to slavery and made a gladiator. Escaping, he collected a body of slaves and gladiators, 73 B. C., and ravaged all southern Italy, defeating several Roman forces that were sent against him. He was defeated and slain by Crassus, 71 B. C. His revolt at one time threatened the very existence of the republic.
