FINE NEW RUDDY HOME DAMAGED BY FIRE SUNDAY

Two young ladies walking up the railroad track in the west part of the city at one o'clock last Sunday saw fire on the roof of the new John W. Ruddy residence in First ward, and ran to give them the alarm. Sparks from the chimney had set fire to the roof on the south side. A bucket brigade was organized which worked until the arrival of the fire department, which made a quick response and put out the fire between the sheeting of the roof with the chemical. The damage is conservatively placed at $500 which is covered with insurance. The contents of two bed rooms and two clothes closets were drenched with water. Mr. Ruddy was taking a bath at the time of the alarm was given. He asks that the young ladies who gave the alarm make themselves known, so that he may thank them for their thoughtful service.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.
Luther C. Benson, pastor.
Services next Sunday morning at ten-thirty o'clock and in the evening at eight o'clock. The Sunday School meets at eleven forty-five o'clock. The Centenary spirit is running high. There are three stages in warfare development. The first is to hide behind trees and rocks, like the Indian and attempt to conquer the foe by concealing oneself. The next step is to carry a shield. This is the soldiers attempt to carry his hiding place along with him. The last stage is to build submarine chasers, land tanks and airplanes in which to go after the enemy rough shod. My point is clear. The centenary movement aims to build chasers and destroyers out of men who will attack any U boat that lurks in the waters of human society. It aims to build tanks out of men who will "go over the top" right into the enemies' lines; it aims to build men, who like the airplanes, can fly above the foe and hurl the missiles of death upon him.
Methodism stands for the best.

Careless Driving.
What might have been a serious accident occurred on the crossing at Litchfield Ave. and Fourth Street last Saturday evening. A car came speeding down Litchfield from the East just as Olof Ostenson was crossing the street. Olof who is quite deaf did hear the approaching car, and the driver did not slow up but ran into the boy, and knocked him down. He looked back but when he saw the boy crawling over.
Several people who witnessed the accident were very indignant at the indifference of the man with the car. They assisted the frightened boy up to Dr. Davidson's clinic where a careful examination it was found that the injuries were not worse than a bad shaking up and a few bruises.

"Acting Up"

By LINCOLN ROTHBLUM
(Copyright, 1918, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mirandy Jenkins folded her checked gingham apron triangle fashion, and tucking the corner in at the belt, rested her arms on the fence railing.
It was summer time in the outlying farm districts of the town of Carrollton and the air was redolent with the green odor of alfalfa. Mirandy tilted her nostrils to get the diffusing fragrance. On the crest of the hill, topping the road which led past the house, appeared a none too strong horse. It dragged with lagging feet a rig of doubtful origin. It would have been difficult to tell the occupation of the driver who sat beneath the ragged and sagging top if not for the sack which lay at his feet labeled in letters of warning size, "U. S. Mail." As the outfit started down grade the man raised his crushed hat and made an effort to brush the upstanding hairs into place. A "ribbon" tie was next adjusted and to its already numerous stains were added a few more from the dusty hands. When these offices had been performed, he shifted the reins from his right to left hand and waved in recognition of Mirandy's fluttering handkerchief.
"Mornin', Mandy," was his greeting, as he drew up before the gate.
"Mornin', Seth. Any mail for me?"
"Nothin'," cept the county newspaper. "How's y'r grandpaw?"
"Poorly, poorly, Seth. The doc says he won't last much longer."
"Then we'll get married, Mandy, and no puttin' it off again, Eh?"
Mirandy blushed as if this were the first time the subject had been broached to her. "La, Seth, how you do talk," was the flirtatious response; "but it just seems like we'll never get there. First it was grandpaw who kept us from getting married, what with being so sick and cantankerous, and then you lost y'r job—and of course we couldn't get married 'til you was appointed this route, and now it's your grandpaw sick and aillin' and eatin' up the revenue."
Seth spat out a generous quid of tobacco and after replacing it with a fresh supply, shook his head resignedly. "Well, I'll be 'round tomorrow, Mandy—so long."
"So long Seth. I'll be expectin' you."
And Mirandy's workworn figure drooped as her eyes followed the departing buggy. Sentenced to the hard manual drudgery of a badly managed farm before securing even such elemental education as the village offered; saddled with aged grandpaw who fought off every innovation which might have lightened her labors, and forced by eternally present financial straits to forego any pleasure which involved the expenditure of money, Mirandy's youth had slipped away almost without her knowledge, until she found herself well on the road to forty with a rapid complexion and toll-hardened hands as her only assets.

But in this sacrificing and unheralded martyrdom, to which she had given herself with neither complaint nor hope for reward, there were two pinnacles of joy. One was Seth, to whose everlasting credit must be said that none of the obstacles which had delayed his wedding to Mirandy had lessened his fidelity.
Mirandy crept into bed, where despite the straw tick she soon asleep. She arose unrested. The morning sun, scarcely awake, suggested another round of toilsome tasks. Perhaps every morning it was the thought of Seth which hastened the always rapid dressing and the chores were well completed as she retreated to her bedroom to "fuss up" before waiting at the fence.
But this morning Seth was destined to wait himself into impatience, for no aproned figure leaned against the gate as he drew up. So he walked to meet her.
"Mornin', Mandy."
"Mornin', Seth. Any mail for me?"
"Nothin'" cept the county newspaper. But I got a letter, an' seen' as you might as well get used to openin' my mail now, I brought it to you."
Mirandy smiled at the subtle compliment in a style Seth dubbed "pritty."
"Why, it's from the government," Mirandy exclaimed as she took the envelope with its franking privilege stamp. Anything official frightened her, but perhaps it was woman's intuitive premonition which foretold the bad news her face so patently reflected.
"It says, Seth," she muttered, "it says you got to get—you got to get an auto if you want to keep y'r job."
And so to meet the government's changes for efficiency went Seth's entire savings. And though the new system augmented his salary, he soon found that the price of gasoline ran higher than that of oats.
It was again summer in Carrollton. Mirandy was very happy this morning, for had not the wedding date been set just six months off? Six months is a very short time when one has been waiting long on twenty years.

"Mornin', Mandy."
"Mornin', Seth. Any mail for me?"
"Nothin'" cept the county newspaper, and then with a mock air of surprise, "I declare, why here's a letter for you, just as if he had not nearly yielded to the temptation to open it ever since it had been placed in his mail sack at six o'clock that morning."
"A letter for me?" echoed Mirandy. But Mirandy's astonishment at getting a letter did not equal her amazement as she read its contents. On the letterhead of an attorney, it ran: "You' uncle, Ezekiel Barrett, has died intestate. As sole surviving heir, you are entitled to the $500 he has left. Our solicitor will visit you shortly to secure the necessary signature."
Then Mirandy did a thing unheard of. She kissed Seth. "We can get married right off now," she gurgled.

"get married, Seth, don't you hear?"
"For Seth was already chugging down the road. Mirandy stared at the letter.
The next morning the customary exchange of greetings was omitted as Mirandy abruptly asked, "Now we got the money, won't you want to be gettin' married?"
Seth looked up as he rolled a stone with the toe of his boot. His answer came hesitatingly. "Can't you see, Mandy, if I was to marry you now, without a cent of my own, folks'll be sayin' I was marryin' you for y'r money."
"Have you got a mind?" Mirandy asked sarcastically. Seth stood silent. Then one morning Seth did not find Mirandy at the gate. She was sick. The doctor had ordered an alarming array of pills and medicines and although Seth faithfully sat at her bedside every evening, Mirandy refused to get well. Seth went about like a shadow of his former self. Never before had he realized just how very much Mirandy meant in his life. And then came the relapse! Mirandy was dying. The doctor confessed he could do nothing. Seth sat by the bed and held the poor hands in his own wary, calloused ones. What could he do? Oh, if he could save her!
"Mandy," he called suddenly, "let's get married."
Mirandy stirred. "I heard the doc tellin' you," came in a weak, faraway voice, "that I be dyin'."
Tears unheeded traced grimy routes down Seth's tanned cheeks. Mirandy went on. "Folks'll think if you married me now you'll be wantin' to inherit my money."
"Oh, Mandy," Seth choked, "what do we care 'bout folks' round here? I want to 'tend you like a husband while y're here."
Mirandy turned over at the unusual sentimentality of Seth's speech. "All right, Seth, then we'll get married," she answered with a smile.
And Mirandy seemed to improve at once. Perhaps it was Seth's husbandly care, or perhaps it was just something else, but Mirandy got well with surprising rapidity.
It was after the wedding, Mirandy, seated on the arm of Seth's chair, nervously straightened the edge of the lace dolly pinned on the coarse, horse-hair upholstery.
"I got a confession to make," she said.
Seth looked up and took the clay pipe from his mouth. He thought in twenty years he had learned everything in Mirandy's life.
"I wasn't dyin' that time, Seth," she smiled, "the doc helped to make y' see you needed me. I was just actin' up, Seth."
And then Seth did a thing unheard of. He kissed Mirandy.

Dog Finds Defender.
The National Humane Review
And yet ungrateful persons among the dog on the pretext of reviving the sheep industry, when it is well known that the sheep industry in the United States was destroyed because of international competition by the cheap wool of Australia, where labor is $8 a month and land is worth $5 an acre, and Americans have better paying crops at home. Oh, the folly of the stupidity of it! The heartlessness and insincerity of it! These silly people will not win in this bloody crusade. The heart and morality of the world is too big to sanction a wholesale butchery of this kind, which is opposed by truth, common sense and loyalty.

Like and Unlike.

An old preacher used to say that a wife should be at once like and unlike three things. First, she should be like a small, always keep with her, but she should not, like a small, carry all she has on her back. Secondly, she should be like an echo, to speak when she is spoken to; but she should not, like the echo, always have the last word. Thirdly, she should be like the town clock, always keep time regularly; but she should not, like the town clock, speak so loud that all the town may hear her. —Boston Transcript.
