If it involves the people's interest, popularize it. It took America nearly a year to make the war popular; it required less than a summer to tip the scale when once our boys in France got into action. It required a hundred years for the dry to get the people on the water wagon, but when prohibition once became popularized, the people put the nation dry with a rush. Missionary endeavor has been popularized. At last the people have been aroused to the world's need.

Leading statesmen, business men and the people in general have seen the flare of the missionary's torch, and know that the world must be made Christian. Victory is in sight. The armies of the old social have collapsed; the army of a great new world is on the march. The world will be evangelized in this generation. The Centenary movement is a conscientious attempt on the part of Methodism to put over its passion of the job in the spirit of a "Soldier that needeth not be ashamed." The passion of the layman both in the money point and service has become amazing. The Lord has always had His fields white unto harvest, but this is the first time in the sweep of the ages that so many laborers have entered the vineyard hungry for a job. The Centenary will succeed.
