BUILD A KEYSTONE SILO

For Strength Durability and Economy

FOR STRENGTH—The Keystone Silo is built from concrete and Steel with a heavy cast iron door frame fitted with a fire proof door with a steel hoop laid in concrete every seven inches from the bottom to the top.

FOR DURABILITY—The Keystone is built with the steel laid in the concrete which acts both as reinforcement and hoop purpose, this also keeps the steel from rusting making it just as durable as the concrete, where if we had it exposed to the weather it would rust out in ten to fifteen years.

FOR ECONOMY—The first cost is the only cost, it can't rot, it will not blow down and it will not burn.

"During the past ten years I have been breeding Duroc Jersey hogs. Have not advertised much, but have been steadily learning the business and studied the problems of the successful breeder. After trying other lines, I selected the Gano line of breeding as I found them the most profitable for feeding. Not wishing to boast or brag, I feel that I am offering in this sale some of the best line-bred gilts and sows of the popular strain heretofore mentioned. We have to the credit of the Gano breed the famous Long Gano sow owned by Johnson Bros. of Olivia, Minn., which is said to be the highest price sow in the world, $10,000. I will offer the following choice breeding stock at this sale.

One of our oldest residents is Mr. Amund Johnson, father of Anton Jacobson and John Amundson. He celebrated his 89th birthday on Friday. Mrs. Jacobson is but two years younger than her husband. She will visit her son Carlisle in Seattle, Washington and from there will make the coast trip to Long Beach, where she will join friends and relatives.
