MEDAYTO FARMS DUROCS

Many farmers can recall the time when it took from nine months to a year to grow a hog that weighed two hundred and fifty pounds. Durocs with proper care will weigh 250 pounds in growing condition at six or seven months of age, and then will put on an extra hundred pounds the next month, if fed for market, showing a nice profit under ordinary conditions of feeding. They will also sell at a higher figure for breeding stock, as everyone realizes that the biggest profit in feeding swine is made feeding those which make the biggest gains on a certain amount of feed. To secure these gains it is necessary to have proper foundation stock, or to spend years of breeding to bring the ordinary stock up to this standard. With prevailing low prices of good Durocs, it is far more profitable to purchase good animals now, and to secure the profits of feeding them rather than continue feeding others for several generations. Often a good sow will pay for herself with the profit on her first litter.

Present prices of good Durocs assure as large profits as any investment that can be made on the farm. There is also the satisfaction of raising the best.

If you are interested in Durocs or not, we enjoy showing ours, so come at your earliest convenience.
