Freud-Thompson A very pretty home wedding was solemnized last Thursday at high noon when Miss Ethel Florense Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Thompson, 513 Litchfield Ave. East, was united in marriage to Ernest W. Freud, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Freud of this city. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride, Rev. E. A. Wahlquist of St. Paul speaking the vows. The attendants were Miss Marian Nelson, bridesmaid, and Dr. O. I. Thompson, brother of the bride, was groomsmen. The bride wore a blue tricotine suit. After the ceremony a three course wedding dinner was served at the brides home to the immediate relatives. The rooms were prettily decorated in roses and sweet peas. The young couple left immediately by car on a trip to the twin cities and also other points in Northern Minnesota. Both parties are well known in this city the bride being a graduate of the class of 1918 Willmar High School. The groom holds a position as clerk in the Willmar post office. They will be at home to their many friends after August 1st at 606 Litchfield Ave. East.—Contributed.

Back at Postoffice Harold Gilbert is the new sub-clerk at the local postoffice. He commenced his duties last Thursday morning. He was also employed at the postoffice as clerk during his vacation last year. Harold has been attending the State University where he is taking a law course. He will return to the "U" again in September.

KARIN By ANNIE LYNCH. (© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) When Jerry discovered that he was falling in love with Karin he swore softly, but firmly, and resolved not to see her again. Whereupon, vastly relieved in mind, he phoned her and made an engagement for the following evening. Karin of the limpid blue eyes, the dull gold hair, and the firm white skin, was secretary to elderly John Ritter of the house of Ritter & Ritter. Chosen primarily because of her beauty (Ritter was a connoisseur in a dignified way), her brains soon made her an invaluable aid to the senior member of the firm. Furthermore, Mr. Ritter, desirous of an heir for his name and his wealth, and knowing that the cold, blue blood of the Ritters needed an infusion of warm red blood lest the stock deteriorate, had decided to marry Karin. Of which Karin was aware. She was aware, too, of Jerry's perturbation, perhaps because his thoughts paralleled her own. Both she and Jerry had a penchant for luxuries. Jerry was a darling, but his salary was barely sufficient for his standard of living. Mr. Ritter, gentleman and aristocrat, had wealth, and Karin had no fancy for a "cotton-stocking" existence. It was easy for these two young things to indulge in such thoughts, when apart. But when, as tonight, they danced together, Jerry, for his part, forgot that he had resolved to break with Karin, forgot that he was spilling her chances, that Karin, and Karin's clothes, gossamer webs to entangle a man's heart, were too expensive for him. He was conscious only of her nearness, of her allure. Thus, all-forgotten, he was scarcely prepared for her remark, when back at their table, the dance finished, she raised her coffee cup: "To our last evening together," she smiled lightly. Then as Jerry stared blankly, she added slowly, "This afternoon I promised to marry Mr. Ritter." Karin had outplayed him. Man-like, angry and hurt, he was inclined to sulk. They left shortly after, their evening spoiled. At the door of her apartment Karin turned. "Boy, dear, have you the right to be angry? After all, you are no fonder of cotton stockings than I." She stood on tiptoe, encircled his neck with her arms, and kissed him a soft, little, lingering, regretful kiss. She went inside quickly. It was six months before they met again. Then one night at the "Follies" Jerry's seats were next to hers and Ritter's. Jerry exchanged commonplace with Ritter, who looked not altogether pleased with the coincidence, but his eyes were all for Karin. More like a flower than ever in her silver and blue gown he thought her. In his prejudiced eyes the fluff young person with him suffered in comparison with Karin's serene young dignity. Under cover of the music Karin turned. "Is all well with you, Jerry?" she questioned. "Yes," he lied, not knowing that the misery in his young eyes told Karin all that she wanted to know of the past months. For the rest of the evening Jerry stared grimly ahead watching the stage unseeingly. Six months of dream-haunted nights had dented his armor of self. Karin and Karin's love were worth any price. He knew now. He told himself that he would not have it any different for her. Glancing at Ritter, the finished, the elegant, beside whom he always felt boorish and clumsy, he knew that there was a fit mate for Karin. She would make an exquisite mistress for the old Ritter home. She belonged there among the Ming vases, priceless rugs and rare paintings; not beside him among tray cloths and dusters. And his heart rose up to mock his head. A week later he dined with Karin in her apartment. The dinner was delicious—a thick, juicy steak with mashed potatoes, hot rolls, topped off with flaky apple pie and cheese. Jerry was hopelessly in love, but he did ample justice to Karin's cooking. Dinner finished, together they did the dishes in the tiny kitchenette, where they got continually in each other's way. It was all very jolly and they laughed a great deal over nothing at all. Back in the sitting room a little silence fell. Jerry smoked, watching the candle light bring out the golden beam of her hair. Her eyes, he reflected with remarkable originality, were just the color of her dull blue gown. He had never seen that one before. It must be a new one, for Ritter's benefit, he supposed bitterly. As if guessing his thoughts, Karin spoke. "You like my gown," she questioned. She sprang to her feet and whirled around before him. "See," she commanded. Then, "I made it myself. Third time it has been made over; each time a different color." She stopped confused, then blushing deeply, she went on bravely, "I—I can sew—I can cook; witness my dinner this evening, and—"
