OBSERVATIONS

(By the Cornfield Philosopher)

Calamity Howlers

Editor Tribune: Some party, odd years ago, every farmer who was not satisfied with the conditions under which he is making a living, was called a "Calamity Howler" by the "fat boys," who stood between him and the consumer of his product and by the professional politicians. It was of course a term of reproach or so intended. Well I know to whom the term was first applied.

There was then living at Bradford just across the Cedar River from Nashua in the Southwestern corner of Chickasaw County, Iowa, a down East Yankee by the name of Lemuel H. Weller. He had a splendid farm home but he was a man of an inquiring turn of mind and possessed along with no mean of natural ability, especially as a speaker, a very fair education. This was in the day of the Farmers' Alliance. The farmers in the Northeastern part of Iowa, which then comprised of the Fourth Congress District and included Chickasaw County, took kindly to the Alliance movement and many local organizations were started. I spent some time in that section as an organizer and lecturer.

Mr. Weller became very enthusiastic and gave a great deal of time and attention to the study of the Alliance principles. That great agricultural district was then represented in Congress by a railroad attorney. One of the things taught by the Alliance and strongly emphasized was that no railway lawyer could properly represent farmers in a law making body. The Democrats at that time in that District were in a hopeless minority. Mr. Weller conceived the idea that he himself would run for Congress as a "farmer's candidate" against the railroad attorney, one Tom Updegraff.

I visited him at his home early in 1882 and becoming convinced that he was in earnest and if elected he would make a very creditable representative I espoused his candidacy and helped him plan his campaign.

The Democrats kept out of the way and Mr. Weller being a low tariff man they all supported him.

I wrote a letter to the Western Rural, the Alliance Newspaper, (the publisher of that paper Milton George, being the founder of the organization.)

In this article, I called special attention to the issue raised by Mr. Weller's candidacy. This notice so pleased him that I believe he had a copy of that sent to nearly every farmer in his district.

The enemy not being able to meet his arguments dubbed Mr. Weller a "Calamity Howler" and as "Calamity" Weller he became widely known not only in the state but all over the nation.

For he was elected and became a thorn in the side of the plunderbund in Congress. The term given him in derision aroused the curiosity of the people and great crowds came to hear him.

The term Calamity Howler gradually spread until it included every dissatisfied farmer and all who were inclined to look with any favor on the new political movement.

Well we have made some progress in the past forty years for all farmers are "Calamity Howlers" today.

For instance, if a man should be found living on a farm who understands the Cummins-Esch railroad law and is fully satisfied with its purpose and operations and is unable to see the calamity to the farmers that must follow unless the Act is speedily modified, or at least materially repealed, it would be a case where his "women folks" would be justified in taking leg in steps towards having him sent away to some institution for the feeble-minded.

I trust that the "Calamity Howlers" will go to the polls this coming fall in such numbers that not a single Congressman in this great West who supported the infamous measure above mentioned will be endorsed or re-elected and this includes Frank B. Kellogg and Andrew J. Volstead.
