

INSTRUCTIONS.

The lack of instructions for Harrison is placing the special organs of the President in a very uncomfortable state of mind. Col. Shepherd, of the New York Mail and Express, assures the country that this makes no real difference; but a good many of the organs show by their mental perturbation that it does make a good deal of difference.

Our county and district conventions yesterday emphasized this disposition to leave delegates absolutely free to choose, by giving no instructions, while very properly complimenting the administration of President Harrison. And, at the local conventions, as has been the case elsewhere, speakers' voices were drowned in mighty waves of applause when their words merely foreshadowed that they were going to mention the name of Blaine.

The other day at the New York state Republican convention in Albany, Naval Officer Willis got up as the special champion of President Harrison and insisted upon the convention passing a resolution forcing the delegates to Minneapolis to vote for Harrison. This action was displeasing to the convention, not only because Naval Officer Willis is a federal office holder under obligations to the President, but because the spirit of the convention was decidedly against binding the delegates to any one man. Mr. Willis, in endeavoring to force instructions and in seeking to use his position to influence the convention, violated the civil service law and is subject to its penalties. It is such unfortunate zeal as this which is detrimental to the President's interests and he should restrain his friends in deference to the disposition of the party generally to have the Minneapolis convention a spontaneous, freedom-of-will body.

As Mr. Eustis said in his speech yesterday: "The duty of your delegate should be, as far as possible, to voice the wishes of those who sent him." Otherwise the whole process of electing delegates is a roaring farce. The spirit of Hennepin county and the Fifth district Republicans is so widely pervasive that he is densely stupid who does not understand it. Mr. Eustis could hardly get the words, "and associated with him," out of his mouth, before the convention, knowing that he was going to refer to Blaine, was transmuted into one long-drawn, cataract-like cheer for the secretary. It is safe to say that under such conditions the proportion of the delegations at the convention next month tied down to Harrison will not be overwhelming. And the folly of the special organs of the President has been to place under the ban and to deny the Republicanism of every person who contends for absolute freedom of choice on the part of the delegates at the Republican national convention. There is too much of the medieval bigotry about this ugly disposition and people do not like it.—MINNEAPOLIS JOURNAL.

Todd Co. Argus: The Globe is opposed to the Washburn and Hatch anti-option bills because it says these bills seek to make compulsory what should be left to the free decision of the citizen acting with a full sense of his duty and his responsibility. This may be all right in theory, but when a citizen or a number of citizens use this freedom persistently to defraud others of the just rewards of their labor, for instance manipulating the wheat market and beating it down as has been done the past month, it appears to us to be time to climb down from the pinnacle of such lofty theories and get at some practical remedy. If the speculation in wheat depresses the price, it is robbing our farmers of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and there is no hope that men will cease these speculations unless forced to do so by laws enacted for that purpose.
