

ELIZABETH BETSEY AND BESS.
Elizabeth, Betsey and Bess
Went walking in sunny weather;
Up on a tree in a lane,
Two apples were hanging together.
Elizabeth, Betsey and Bess.
They each picked an apple and ate it;
But still there was one apple left;
If you know the reason, just state it.

FACING DEATH.

THE war of the revolution in South America between the natives of the country and their Spanish masters was one of the most remorseless and sanguinary on record. All principles of humanity were set aside by the ferocious butchers in authority till at length guerra a la muerte death and extermination, became the fearful war-cry of each half-frenzied faction. At the head of the royalist forces was General Morales, as savage and blood-thirsty a wretch as ever existed, and opposed to him, as chief of the patriots, was General Bolivar, the subsequent founder of the five republics of Venezuela, New Granada, Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador. On one occasion some five and twenty patriots had been taken by the royalists; among them were three or four officers of high rank. Morales had their heads cut off and sent to Bolivar, with an insulting letter in which he declared that every captured rebel should be served in the same manner. Upon this Bolivar gave immediate orders for the execution of all the royalist prisoners in the hands of the patriots; and in return for this act of retaliation Morales resolved upon a massacre which should strike terror to the hearts of all. On one pretense, and another the Spanish authorities had caused the arrest of all persons suspected of being disaffected toward the government, and some 800 in number were confined in the dungeons of La Guayra. A large body of cavalry and infantry was drawn up around the fortress where the poor prisoners were confined, and soon these latter—pale, emaciated, and almost naked—were marched forth in chains and conducted to a gloomy spot called Macuto. There chanced to be a British man-of-war in the harbor of La Guayra, and the commander believing that some of his own countrymen might be among the victims, and that some good to them might be effected by his presence, resolved upon accepting the invitation sent him by the authorities and being present at the execution. He accordingly, with some of his officers and several of his men, fell into the mournful procession, and on arriving at the fatal spot was assigned to a post of honor near the commander of the bloody work. The prisoners were brought in a body, and halted upon a spot which overlooked the place of execution. At a signal from the commanding officer some fifty of the victims were selected and marched forth to the place of slaughter. On their way they had to pass within a few paces of the place where the general and his staff and the British captain and his officers were stationed. As soon as they had taken their station on the fatal ground, the priests slowly withdrew, while the infantry marched up within a few paces, leveled their pieces, and fired at the word. Many were killed outright by this discharge; many were mortally wounded, but yet lived and writhed, and a few were scarcely injured. None, however, were permitted to escape long—for amid the prayers and groans of the poor wretches, another line of infantry took the place of the first, and another murderous volley was poured into the breasts of the wounded and dying, and what yet escaped were shot dead with pistols, or cut to pieces with swords, in the hands of the officers. When the first fifty of the prisoners had been dispatched, the second lot was selected and marched forward in the manner already described. As these passed the general's stand the British captain was pained to observe some three or four faces which he could not but believe to be fellow-countrymen. "Are not certain of these men English, Senor Commandante?" he inquired, turning to the Spanish general. "It is possible, Senor Captain, they had English birth, but they transgressed Spanish laws, and must suffer the penalty."
"Would your excellency not permit me to intercede for them in behalf of the government?"
"My orders are very positive, Senor Captain, to put all the prisoners under my charge to death."
The captain, seeing there was no chance to save the poor fellows, remained silent, and the ill-fated group moved on to meet the bloody fate of those who had preceded them. At length, as the eighth or ninth division of victims was filing past, there looked up at the British officers a pale, white face, and a pair of blue eyes were fixed searchingly but mournfully upon them.
"Farewell, gentlemen and fellow countrymen," spoke a firm and steady voice, "and when you return to our glorious native isle, pray report that Lorenzo Ferguson of Scotland met his death as became a gentleman and a soldier!"
"Hah!" exclaimed the captain, "there is no mistake this time—that man is a Briton, and must be saved! Senor Commandante, I ask the life of that man in the name of his Britannic majesty!"
"I regret, Senor Captain, that my duty compels me to deny so natural a demand," replied the Spanish general, somewhat coldly. "Senor Morales has the power of life and death in his hands."
"Then grant a reprieve till your superior can be consulted!" rejoined the other.

"I would if I dared, Senor Captain." Meantime the excitement among the other British officers and men was becoming intense, and loud and angry denunciations of Spanish officers and Spanish tyranny began to be spoken quite freely among them, while the priming of more than one pistol was looked to and more than one sword was loosened in its scabbard. The Spanish general was not a little discomposed by these unpleasant demonstrations of gathering trouble, but he still remained firm, and the procession moved on.
The British seamen, who were grouped apart from the officers, seemed even more excited than the latter; and just as the prisoners, poor Ferguson among the number, had reached the horrid scene where their companions lay piled in bloody heaps, the attention of all was arrested by the loud yell of an Irishman, who ran swiftly down to the fatal ground, shouting at the top of his lungs:
"Hold up, ye cowardly spalpeens! To the devil wid ye, now, for a set of murderin' beasts! Would you shoot a white Christian gentleman that way, now? If ye does the like it'll have to be through Barney O'Reilly's body!"
While all eyes were fixed upon the scouting Barney, he reached the doomed file of prisoners, in front of the muskets of the executioners, and throwing his arms around the neck of poor Ferguson, fairly yelled out in triumph:
"Now, fire away, ye yaller nagurs, and sure an' it's the British lion ye'll soon hear roaring around ye, ye murdering thieves."
These remarks were spoken in English, and not Spanish, and were not understood by the Spanish soldiery, or it is quite possible Mr. O'Reilly might not have lived to repeat them.
"Call back your fellow yonder, Senor Captain, or I will not be answerable for the consequences," said the Spanish general to the British captain.
"Not I!" was the sharp reply; "and if a hair of his head be injured, look to it, Senor Commandante, that you do not wish that you had never seen this day, for he, sir, is a British subject, and under the protection of the British flag!"
There was a hurried consultation between the general and his staff, and then an aide dashed forward and delivered an order to the officer in direct command of the infantry, who seemed to be in doubt as to what was proper for him to do under the circumstances.
This order brought Lorenzo Ferguson from the fatal file and gave him life and liberty.
Of the 800 doomed prisoners Lorenzo Ferguson alone escaped the death decreed by the fiendish Morales, and on the spot where they fell many of their bones may to this day be seen bleaching in the sunshine and storm, for they who murdered refused them burial.

BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER.
The One Longed for Revenge, and at the Last Moment Hesitated.
Of all the sad tales of civil war, Anclayic can produce one of the saddest.
Not far from Standing Rock is an old deserted house where once lived the Welcome family, composed of the old mother and her two sons, Frank and George, Frank having fallen in love with a Southern girl, went South and soon obtained possession of a large plantation.
The great civil war soon commenced. Frank Welcome joined the Confederate forces, and his brother George after much begging, got permission to enlist in the Union Army.
It was after the battle of Fair Oaks that George received the news of the death of his mother, which was caused by a broken heart, and the enlistment of Frank in the Confederate Army. George felt much hurt by his brother's action, and longed for revenge which soon came.
A short time after his mother's death, he was transferred, his regiment being ordered to storm part of a Confederate breastwork. There was some smart skirmishing, and a hot contest; but the Union forces gained the parapet. George was one of the first to get on it. Already two Southerners had met their death by his bayonet, and he was about to bayonet the third.
He hesitated. A wild gleam of joy, mingled with madness, lit up his eyes, and for a moment he stood still.
The rebel had drawn his pistol and was about to fire when he also stopped. Something uncontrollable seemed to prevent the one from firing and the other from sending his bayonet through him.
Suddenly a stray bullet entered George's heart, and he dropped his gun. The bayonet wounded the Southerner, and the next instant George fell in his brother's arms.
The next morning the two brothers were found dead close beside each other.—N. Y. Recorder.

ERADICATING THE MIGRATORY INSTINCT.
The migration of birds is due to instinct. But this instinct may be easily overcome and suppressed. On the roof of the city hall in Donaoworth, Bavaria, a couple of storks have a nest which they have not left for three years. The first time they remained because there was a young bird too weak to fly south. The parents were not willing to leave their little one and stopped to feed it. They liked the winter and have stayed in their nest ever since; having reared young every year, all of whom left when the cold season came and the storks departed for the south. But the old couple remain and do not seem to have any worse health for being exposed to the cold northerly winds on a high house top.—Boston Advertiser.

M'KINLEY PROSPERITY.

WAGES AND PRICES IN THE FALL RIVER COTTON MILLS.
Senator Carlisle's Exaggerations Tested in the Cotton Industry—Wages Rising and Prices Falling—Large Increase of Workmen's Savings.
FALL RIVER, Aug. 1.—Senator Carlisle, in his reply to Senator Aldrich, declared that in fifteen "highly protected industries" wages had fallen since the passage of the McKinley act, "an average of 89-100 of 1 per cent." Among the protected industries named by him was cotton manufactures. Now, Fall River is the largest cotton manufacturing centre in the United States. If there has been any reduction of wages in cotton mills the operatives employed in this town are not aware of it.
There are in Fall River sixty-seven factories, nearly all of them being cotton mills, with 51,446 looms and 2,400,000 spindles. These mills use 260,300 bales of cotton annually. For the operatives there is a pay-roll of $154,505 weekly, or $8,034,260 annually. About $22,153,000 has been invested in the mills. Fall River produces in the course of a year cotton goods worth $21,000,000. It manufactures annually 602,850,000 yards of cloth. The city contains one-sixth of all the spindles in the United States, and manufactures over two-thirds of the domestic print cloths. If the chief industry of such a city, employing 22,780 men and women in its mills, were depressed and its mill hands suffering from a reduction of wages and an increase in the cost of living, as Senator Carlisle asserts, there would naturally be outward signs of the prevailing distress. The most industrious and fanatical tariff reformer will fail to find here any indications of that sort. All the superficial evidences points in the opposite direction. The mill operatives are well paid and prosperous, and instead of having had their wages reduced, have virtually had them advanced within a month. The mills are in full operation and their owners are enjoying exceptional prosperity.
The manufacturing business of the city is expanding under the influence of the McKinley tariff. Investors are building new mills and increasing the number of their spindles. The only dark cloud in the Fall River sky is the avowed determination of the Democratic party to sweep away the American Protective system and to substitute for it "a tariff for revenue only," under which manufacturers and operatives will be exposed to destructive competition of the cheap labor of England, France and Germany.
Wages in the cotton mills have not been reduced, but substantially have been increased. The mill-owners during the past fortnight have cut down the hours of labor of their hands from sixty to fifty-eight hours a week, and in order that there might be no decrease of earnings [from this] rearrangement of the working hours they have advanced their wages 3 1/2 per cent. The hands who were paid by the day have had their wages advanced 3-1-3 per cent. per hour while the job hands get 3-1-3 per cent advance on piece work. The operatives get the full benefit of two hours a week without having to pay for it. On the other hand, the manufacturers lose two hours' work from each hand and have to pay for it in a reduction of weekly product of each mill. One mill-owner has estimated here that this increase of the wages of men and women, and the decrease of their hours of labor will make a difference of $300,000 in the income of Fall River manufacturers. That $300,000 has been given away without any solicitation from the operatives, and by the voluntary action of the mill-owners. Business in the mills, moreover, is so active that the weavers are confidently expecting an additional increase of 7 per cent. in their wages in the course of a year.
"We employ in the Kinz Philip Mill," said Mr. Chase, the treasurer, "1,100 hands, evenly divided between sexes. Our weekly pay-roll amounts to $8,000. Since the fifty-eight-hour schedule went into effect our weavers get $1.04 wages for a piece of goods, instead of $1, as formerly, and 19 1/2 cents is paid in print mills for a piece of forty-five yards, instead of 19 cents for the same amount. The tariff has especially aided us in the goods made of the finer yarns, and in selling the fancy woven fabrics. A good weaver on low grade goods in America will make from $9 to $10 a week, but in England only from $5 to $6 a week. The wages are higher upon the fine grade goods, a weaver earning from $10 to $14 in America, and only from $6 to $7 in England."
Wronz in the facts about labor, Senator Carlisle is strangely misinformed respecting the condition of the operatives of cotton mills. These victims of "tariff taxation and robbery" keep their surplus earnings in the four savings banks of Fall River. The McKinley tariff act went into effect in the fall of 1890. During the next year, according to Senator Carlisle and his free trade friends, the mill hands ought to have suffered from a cut in wages and from increased burdens of "McKinley prices," and to have been unable to enlarge their deposits in the savings banks. Unfortunately for the "tariff reformer's" argument, the mill hands have not been overwhelmed with misfortune. They have increased heavily their savings bank deposits. The savings bank write up the books so as to show the total amount of each depositor's account on October 31 of each year. The following is a comparison of the total deposits in the

REPUBLICAN
E Reciprocal trading under the new treaty began with Cuba September 1, 1891. Our exports to that country in the first eight months increased in round numbers fifty per cent., and in the fiscal year just ended equaled in value nearly $20,000,000.
I In the first eight months our flour exports to Cuba doubled, and in important articles of manufacture, among them engines and boilers, the increase was nearly as great.

CAMPAIGN SONG.
Air:—Ta ra ra, boom de ay.
We belong to the G. O. P.,
We will down your Grover C.
And his second A. D. I. E.
In a-t-a-son as soon can be;
For we're in the fight to win,
And you bet we got the tin;
We will put our Henry in,
We did it once and will agin.
CHORUS: Ta ra ra, boom de ay.
(Eight times.)
We are square against Free Trade;
What we use, we want home-made,
And we will give our party's aid
To workmen of every grade;
In the field or at the fire;
Husband, brother, lover, sire;
These are the words that will inspire:
The worker's worthy of his hire.
CHORUS: Ta ra ra, boom de ay, etc.
We are ready night and day,
For our Democratic prey;
We have come and come to stay
Just because we're built that way.
Honest money is our call;
Equal rights for great and small;
Bread and meat and pie for all.
By these things we stand or fall.
CHORUS: Ta ra ra, boom de ay, etc.
Benjamin is tried and true;
Friend of all the boys in blue;
In the war he fought straight through,
Now he knows just what to do.
We're anxious for the fight,
In our armor strong and bright;
We can't be left for we are right,
And we'll beat 'em out of sight.
CHORUS: Ta ra ra, boom de ay, etc.

DUG A PIT FOR ITSELF.
Cleveland Goes Back on the Party Platform.
"The Democratic party denounces protection because it is unconstitutional from the Democratic point of view; the candidate denounces it because it is unjust and unfair from his point of view, and then he assures us that his opposition to protection is based "upon the highest possible grounds." Mr. Cleveland evidently understands that when the Convention adopted the nullification and Confederate doctrine of the unconstitutionality of protection it dug a deep pit for itself and its candidates, and he is just now engaged in an effort to scramble out of that pit by personally repudiating that "fundamental principle of the Democratic party." It will be interesting to watch his further efforts to explain away the constitutional free-trade doctrine of the Democracy.
A Free-Trader's Opinion.
There has never been a period in the history of this or any other country when the general rate of wages was as high as it is now or the prices of goods relatively to the wages as low as they are to-day, nor a period when the workman, in the strict sense of the word has so fully secured to his own use and enjoyment such a steadily and progressively increasing proportion or a constantly increasing product.—Forum.

CLEVELAND WOULD CARRY ENGLAND.
The Democratic party in the States may rest assured that if English sympathy could carry the election of Grover Cleveland in November the White House would be theirs. We shall watch the development of the struggle with the keenest interest; and even if the triumph be not attained all at once, there is indeed reason for congratulation that one of the great American parties has made free trade, pure and simple, the great battle-cry of the future.
