Ex-Congressman Lind says that he believes strikes would be less apt to interfere with the public convenience if, the governor would insist on both sides arbitrating their differences at once, and in case of a ranway strike if the company were stubborn, they might be brought to time if action was commenced to vacate their charter. and to hand their cream to the Lake Hanska Creamery. It would be well for those Germans above mentioned before they entangle themselves with the seperator station to remember that they have signed a contract with the Linde. & Cottonwood Creamery Co. not only to pay the shares which they have subscribed for, but also to patronize said Creamery with their cream. They can rest assured, that the Washburn's action in Congress has proven hin to be for the Gold standard only. John Lind has both privately and publicly announced himself for bimetalism. If the above city Friday evening after a lingering report should prove true (which I am inclined to doubt) then I must confess, that politics nowadays is getting beyound my comprehension. ### From and About McCleary.

The Washington Post has this to say of congressman McCleary: "A schoolmaster in politics is Representative Mc-Cleary of Minnesota. He looks every inch a student, with his thoughful face closely trimmed beard and his spectacles. Naturally, Mr. McCleary is interested in watching the process of legislation. He does not find the practice so very different from the theory, but it took him a very long time to understand how any. thing was accomplished amid so much apparent indifference and disorder. "I have now come to appreciate the fact however," he says "that there is always somebody on the lookout, and that no really vicious bill can get through the house without being stopped somwhere in its career. Of course, I am not speaking now of measures upon which men differ politically as to their injurious effect. I have also taken occasion to study the personnel of the house, and I see that every man who has been sent which commends him to the people of his district."
