Heroic War Measures.

Chaka, a great African native chief, trained a powerful army which was famous in war. If a regiment was beaten it was slaughtered on its return to the king's palace. If any man lost his weapon in war he was killed for cowardice. If the chief wanted to see what kind of weapons were most successful he would order a sham fight with them in which real lives would be lost.

The Following Rules and Regulations to the Town Supervisors and Overseers were Approved and Adopted.

It shall be the policy of the County Board in the future to concentrate as much as possible its funds for use upon the main traveled roads in the county and in order to obtain the best results it would advise each township to plan its work so that it be done in jobs aggregating $400 or $500, so that in each township at least one or more miles of finished road may be built each year.

In order to obtain county aid it will be necessary for each township board to make an estimate in writing to the county board stating the amount of money needed to be expended on a designated piece of road, stating length of road to be improved and approximate amount of grading, ditching or graveling to be done. This work, if approved by the county board, shall be constructed by the township board under the supervision and advice of the State Engineer and by the Commissioner of the District, and subject to his approval. When such work has been completed and approved by the state engineer and a detailed statement showing the nature and cost of such work has been filed with the county auditor the county board will pay one-half the cost of such work, such cost not to exceed the estimate of the township board and no allowance to be made by the county board in case work is not approved by the State Engineer.

In all new road construction whether making grades, ditching or cutting of hills, the services of the State Engineer shall be required and all work must be carried out as designated by him. Such services are paid by the State Highway Commission and entail no expense on the county or township.

All roads, before graveling is done on them, must be perfectly drained and properly graded and rounded up and must be perfectly smoothed and rounded up in the center with a split log drag. Such grade shall be at least 16 to 20 feet wide and the crown shall not be less than six inches and in new construction work not less than ten inches. The distance between ditches along both sides of the road shall be 30 feet and on swampy ground the distance shall be 50 feet. No sod shall be used in the construction of any road unless it can be covered by at least two or three feet of solid dirt.

In order to encourage proper graveling of roads the county commissioners will agree to pay at the rate of 10 cents per cubic yard for all gravel placed on the road which is taken from approved gravel pits and placed upon roads that are properly drained, graded and crowned and all holes and ruts having first been filled with solid clean dirt, provided further that such gravel be free from sod, vegetables, soils or foreign matter and that it be evenly and smoothly deposited to rope lines laid true and parallel to the center line at a distance of not less than 7 or more than 8 feet and all stones more than one inch in size be kept below the finishing surface.

On all roads designated as state roads no change shall be made there on without the consent of the State Engineer and after state or county funds have been expended upon any portion of said road all work thereafter done on such portion must be done according to the rules and regulations of the State Highway Commission, whether done by county or town authorities. No further allowance of county or town funds can be made on such improved road if the pathmaster or township officers allow sod or vegetable matter to be placed thereon, or allow dirt to be placed upon graveled portions or allow ditches and culverts to become or remain clogged to the detriment of the drainage system. The practice of using the highway for a turning place with plows or other farm implements must be stopped, by enforcing the state laws against destroying ditches and mutilating highways, if necessary.

A very important part of road work is general maintenance and to this end the best qualified man in each district should be chosen and when an overseer has demonstrated his ability he should be retained as long as possible in this position, thereby becoming more valuable to the town through his increasing knowledge of the details of road work and especially the drainage system.

Whenever a low place appears in the traveled track it should be filled with the same material of which the road is made. Weeds and brush must be cut down on the right of way and burned. Whenever the growth of trees on the sides casts too much shadow on the traveled track it should be thinned out and all remaining trees trimmed to a height of at least 8 feet. It is most important that ruts and holes be kept out of all roads as they hold water from every rain and soften the road bed. This can be accomplished by log dragging the road after each soaking rain and while the ground is still moist. This log dragging should be done about ten or twelve times each season and pathmasters should arrange their work so that this is done in every district.

The County Commissioners are a unit in their desire to work for road betterment in all parts of the county and will strive to give assistance where most needed, providing the township officers and road overseers show by conscientious, faithful and intelligent work that they want to do all in their power to build and maintain permanent roads and will in every case give preference to such townships in which its officers can show that they are putting forth their best efforts in permanent road building and maintenance.

A HAUNTED ROOM.

The Mysterious Light That George Cary Eggleston Defied.

There was and perhaps still is a room in a certain house in Virginia which was supposed to be haunted. Every time a person slept there he would be sure to wake after a while to find the whole room pervaded by a dim yellowish gray or grayish yellow light. It was very dim at first, but it increased steadily till the occupant of the chamber fled from the nameless terror in panic. Mr. George Cary Eggleston was not to be daunted by these tales and accordingly decided to try a night there. In "Recollections of a Varied Life" he tells what happened:

It was about midnight when I entered the room. It was raining heavily, and the wind was rattling the stout shutters of the eight great windows of the room.

I went to each of those windows and minutely examined it. They were hung with heavy curtains of deep red. Having completed my examination, I explored the closets and bolted the door, I went to bed. The great four poster was inexpressibly comfortable, and the splash and patter of the rain as it beat upon the window blinds was as soothing as a lullaby. I forgot all about the experiment in which I was engaged, all about ghosts and their ways, and went to sleep.

After a time I suddenly waked to find the room dimly pervaded by that yellowish gray or grayish yellow light which had so disturbed the slumbers of others in that chamber. My awakening was so complete that all my faculties were alert at once. I felt under my pillow and found the pistol still where I had placed it.

Instead of springing hastily from bed, I lay there for a time, watching the weird light as it slowly, almost imperceptibly, increased in intensity. I decided that the gray distinctly predominated, but in the meantime the steady increase in the light and its pervasiveness warned me, and I slipped out of bed.

The rain was still beating heavily against the window blinds, and the strange yellowish gray light was still slowly but steadily increasing. I was resolute, however, in my determination not to be disturbed or hurried by any manifestation. In response to that determination I glanced at the mirror and decided that the mysterious light was sufficient for the purpose, and I resolved I would shave.

Having done so, I bathed in the rapidly increasing light. I was deliberate, however, in donning my clothing, and not till I was fully dressed did I turn to leave the room.

I turned the key. A second later I was out of that chamber, and the oak door of it was securely shut behind me. I went down the great stairway, slowly, deliberately, in pursuance of my resolution. I entered the large hallway below and thence passed to the oak wainscoted dining room, where I sat down to breakfast with the rest of the company.

It was 9 o'clock of a dark, rainy morning. The grayish yellow light was daylight.

A Woman's Sacrifice.

Three years ago a startling tale came to light concerning a prominent business man in Austria. He found himself on the brink of ruin, and his wife came to his rescue at the cost of her own life. Leaving an overheated room one night, she walked up and down a stone flagged passage, barefoot and with nothing on but a nightdress, till she caught a chill which she aggravated by a series of reckless acts. Inflammation of the lungs set in, and she died shortly afterward. Her husband obtained the large sum of money for which her life was insured, and with this he was able to pull through the crisis successfully. He married for a second time within three months of his first wife's death. This husband did not get off scot free, however. A servant in his employ had overheard the conversation in which the heroic young wife had told her husband her intention to die for his sake. The servant informed the police. Then the insurance companies contended it was a case of suicide and sued successfully for the return of the money. The husband was prosecuted for being an accessory to his wife's death and received the punishment he well merited.

A Great Dog Town.

The greatest dog town in Great Britain, if not in the world, is Haverfordwest. There are a great many men in the town who live wholly and make a good living by breeding, buying and selling dogs. Although the population is only 6,000, at least 6,000 dog licenses are issued annually, and there are also a large number of exemptions. Almost daily there are more dogs than people in the public streets, though valuable animals are never allowed to run loose. Haverfordwest dog breeders are known for their working terriers, show terriers, pointers, setters and spaniels, which are daily traded for big sums through the fanciers' journals and go everywhere. It is the home of the Sealyham breed of terriers, the origin of which has puzzled the keenest sportsmen. One fancier's kennel recently sold by auction realized £200, but £250 is not an unusual price for a single dog, while £60, £70 and £80 are almost common. The quaint old town, with its mixed Welsh, English and Flemish population, is almost the hub of the dogs' universe.—Fur News.

SPOKE TO A GHOST

Queer Incident in Which Bishop Wilberforce Figured.

THE STORY THE SPIRIT TOLD.

Singular Disclosure That Was Said to Have Been Made by the Quiet Clerical Specter That Had Long Haunted an English Country House.

The following remarkable incident in the life of the late Samuel Wilberforce, bishop of Oxford and afterward of Winchester, is related as absolutely authentic, and the good bishop himself is said to have many times rehearsed the story to his friends:

On a certain occasion the worthy bishop had accepted an invitation to stay at a country house not far from London. Entering the drawing room previous to dinner on the evening of his arrival, he noticed a clergyman sitting by the open fire and taking no part in the general conversation. The bishop was somewhat surprised at not being presented to the clergyman, and his astonishment was great when a few moments later, dinner being announced, the guests retired, leaving the clergyman at his place by the fire. The hostess having assigned Bishop Wilberforce the seat of honor at her right hand, as soon as an opportunity offered he remarked:

"I beg your pardon, madam, but may I inquire who was the clergyman we left sitting in the drawing room?"

"Ah, you have seen him, then?" replied the lady. "It is not every one who has that privilege. I cannot tell you who he is or whence he comes. For many years this specter has haunted the house and grounds. It has, in fact, been a tradition in the family. He seems to do no harm, and although he appears only occasionally, we have become quite accustomed to our friendly ghost."

"How very singular!" remarked his lordship. "But have you never addressed your specter?"

"Indeed, I have had no opportunity, nor the desire, for that matter," responded the hostess, growing pale.

"May I take the liberty now?" inquired the dignitary.

"With all my heart, your lordship," replied the lady. The bishop arose and, returning to the drawing room, found the clergyman where he had left him a few minutes before. Having no fear, the bishop said kindly: "Who are you, my friend, and why are you here?"

The specter seemed to sigh deeply and say as though to himself, "At last!"

Then in a hollow voice, addressing the bishop, it continued: "I am the spirit of a clergyman who left this world some eighty years ago, and I am here to impart to any one who will receive it a secret which died with me. I could not rest in my grave while a great wrong was being done which it was in my power to right. I have been returning all these years in the hope some one would address me, for it was not given to me to be the first to speak. All men have shunned me until now, and it is your mission to do my bidding. I was called to this house eighty years ago to receive a confession from a dying man. He was the sole possessor of a secret the knowledge of which would alter materially the entail of this vast estate, and in his death he wished to repair the terrible wrong upon his kin.

"At his request I wrote down the confession word for word as he gave it to me, and when he finished he expired in my arms. It was very important that I should return to London that night, and in passing through the library to leave the house I concluded it would be safer not to carry the paper on which was written the confession away with me, but to place it in some secure, unseen spot, where I could obtain it the following day and deliver the document to the person for whom it was intended. Mounting the steps to the bookshelves, I took out a copy of Young's 'Night Thoughts,' which was the first book upon the uppermost shelf nearest the last window, and, inserting the paper carefully between its leaves, I replaced the book and departed. A horse was awaiting me at the door, but ere we reached the entrance of the grounds he took fright. I was thrown and instantly killed. Thus died the secret with me. No one has disturbed that book in all these years, and no one has had the courage to address this messenger from the unknown. The paper will be found as I have stated, and it remains for you to correct the injustice which has so long been upon this noble family. My mission is over, and I can rest in peace."

At the close of this remarkable speech the specter faded gradually from sight, and the bishop was left gazing into space. Recovering from his astonishment, Bishop Wilberforce went at once to the library and found the book exactly as indicated by the specter. In its secluded corner upon the top shelf, thick with the dust of ages, evidently the book had remained unmolested many years. There was the document just as described, but now faded and yellow. The secret of the confession never became known to the world. The good bishop regarded it as a confidence from the spiritual world and always ended the story with the assurance that the priestly specter was never again seen.

It is a fact, however, that about the time of this extraordinary occurrence the magnificent estate in question passed into possession of a remote member of the family who until then had lived in obscurity.—London Standard.
