HIS RISE TO POWER

She looked at him keenly, rose to her feet and went downstairs to procure a vase for the flowers. When she returned, he was staring oddly at them. What she read in his expression was not at all mild.

"Suppose," he said abruptly, "you take the flowers downstairs. They—the odor is a little too heavy."

"I thought," she said quietly, "your laugh was overdue. John, how much had your politics to do with it?"

"A little. She thinks I am a fool. I've found," he added, "that that opinion isn't peculiar to her."

"John," she pleaded wistfully, "why won't you quit? You've done enough."

"Down in your heart, do you want me to quit, Aunt Roberta?"

"Politics has been the ruination of our family. We Dunmeades are all fools!"

"We Dunmeades! You know you never did a foolish thing in your life, Aunt Roberta," he smiled.

"Yes, I did," she answered grimly. "I—I like your kind of foolishness."

"Aunt Roberta," he said, with a flash of the boyishness he had almost lost, "you're the worst humbug in Christendom. You think you're crabbed and cranky and practical, when really you're just a generous, great hearted, romantic old dear. You think you've missed something big and wonderful and you're afraid I'm missing it, too. Maybe you are. Maybe I am. But there are more ways than one of finding romance and happiness. I am not an unhappy man."

"Are you telling the truth?" she asked quietly.

The flash of boyishness subsided. "I think I am," he answered gravely.

But afterward, when she had gone, he carefully gathered up the fallen petals and tossed them into the fire. He watched them quickly shrivel and disappear.

CHAPTER XIII. The Forerunner.

HE went south. The doctor had prescribed three months' rest. John was back in New Chelsea in one, preparing with dogged energy to begin a new campaign against the state machine.

The campaign that followed was but a weary repetition of other years, without the stimulus of hope. The spasm of enthusiasm past, the people had sunk back into habitual lack of interest. The only notable political feature of that year was the quiet contest within the organization between the old boss and the new, a struggle in which Murchell was forced to yield.

When a man sees the best years of his life slipping away with no accomplishment, when he has suffered not only denunciation and misrepresentation, which are not easy to bear, but also treachery and ridicule, which are harder, and misunderstanding and indifference from the people he is trying to serve, which are hardest of all, he cannot be greatly blamed for wanting sometimes to "chuck the game," as Halg put it to John one evening in early winter. The bantering friendship between them, grown deeper as the years passed, had been worth more to John than he quite realized.

"Why don't you chuck the game? You're further back than you were four years ago. The novelty's worn off, the dear pee-pul's tired of hearing you, and they believe that somehow you're worse than an anarchist. And you're even going to be kicked out of office here next spring. Do you know that? You're breaking down your health. You're doing the work of three men and a small boy—for nothing. This county is growing. There's going to be plenty of law business. And you could be the biggest lawyer around here. You are that now in point of ability, though the Lord knows where you find time to study your cases. Why don't you chuck it? Serving the people is the most worthless, thankless job in the world."

"You besotted cynic!" John laughed. "What if we don't get any farther forward? We can't let 'em have the state by default, can we? And isn't altogether thankless. Once in a while I run into men like Cranshaw or Criswell or Sykes. When I see how they depend on me, I—I have to stick it out. It isn't necessarily worthless, either. I've generally found that if you hold on to the breaking point and then hold on a little longer, things get easier all of a sudden."

"Sunday school apothecary. What's to be the next slaughter of the innocents?"

"We elect a governor next year."

"And where'll you find a candidate?"

"Well," said John cheerfully, "I could run myself, you know."

"And offer 'em more bread pills, eh?" Halg was trying to decide whether he was a Socialist or not, hence was critical of all remedies and theories.

"I suppose you are thinking of your bedchamber as a substitute?"

"Not my bedchamber!" Halg murmured. "I wouldn't have the folks you call the people as my brothers. They're interesting to me only as a study in animality. What can you expect of a people whose very ideal is concentrated selfishness?"

"But the people don't understand that's all."

"Not understand! You can say that! Do you suppose there's an intelligent man in the state who doesn't know that you have as much brains and capacity for government, and far more character, than either Murchell or Sherrord or any of their tribe? Yet they turn you down for them every time. Why? Because the Murchells and the Sherrords represent the people. You don't. Ninety-nine out of a hundred men, all over the nation, have a pretty clear notion of what's going on in politics and government, and they have a rudimentary social instinct that tells them it is wrong. Sometimes that instinct sense gets them interested in a reform, but the interest lasts only for about one campaign. Just as you have found it. We don't really care. We don't want things changed."

"But—"

"Here, I have the floor. Things are rotten—yes! There's a stink in every plane of our national life. You think you have a purpose in life to clean up this state. Well, then play the game as you find it, make of yourself a despot. And when you have your power, use it to win compromises from the other strong ones, and to give the people just as much as they are able to use and enjoy. Among a selfish people only a supreme, practical egoist can lead."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

W. R. Fox, 195 W. Washington St., Noblesville, Ind., says: "After suffering many months with kidney trouble, after trying other remedies and prescriptions, I purchased a box of Foley Kidney Pills which not only did me more good than any other remedies I ever used, but have positively set my kidneys right. Other members of my family have used them with similar results." Take at the first sign of kidney trouble.

Dr. Graf Wins Third Prize.

Dr. J. P. Graf, Jos. Smasal, W. J. Julius, Chas. Stuebe, Sr., B. H. Deters, Otto Oswald and Gust. Goetsch were New Ulm's contingent at the State Skat Tournaunt held at the West Side Club, St. Paul, Sunday afternoon and evening. Dr. Graf won third prize winning a grand ovre hands down. At the business meeting Chas. Stuebe, Sr. was elected Vice Pres. and Dr. J. P. Graf a member of the Board of Directors of the State Skat League.

At a recent meeting the local club decided to have a statewide tournament here on February 16th and the New Ulmites went to St. Paul primarily for the purpose of encouraging the "Wenzelriter" to come to New Ulm on that day. The encouragement received exceeded their highest expectations. The M. & St. L. has agreed to run an excursion on that day which means about 300 strangers in our midst and as successful a "Skat Meet" as has been held in recent years.
