The grading down of Court House Square has been decided upon. Some there are who consider this a wrong move, but the large majority of our citizens are in full accord with recent action of the County Board. The object in cutting down the square is to beautify it and to make it a more attractive spot as we understand it. If this should not be the reason for the change then we have nothing to say. If it is for the purpose of enhancing the attractiveness of the place, then we would suggest that a competent landscape gardener be consulted to draw the necessary plans. In speaking to Mr. J. A. Ochs of the

My Schoolhouse.

(With Apologies to Henry W. Longfellow)

Under the skies, be they blue or gray My little schoolhouse stands Battered, but loyal and steadfast still To learning's stern demands. O'er looking pleasant plains and roads And miles of fertile lands. Each morning eighteen pairs of eyes Look in at the open door. Each morning eighteen pairs of feet Track up my spotless floor; Each morning eight eager minds Come to absorb my lore.

Week in, week out, from morn till night (In accents not too low) You can hear them say their lessons o'er Or hear them come and go Up to my desk to have explained A hundred things or so. Tolling, rejoicing, sorrowing, So each day comes and goes Each morning sees my task begun Each evening sees its close A little accomplished, a little done, Has earned a night's repose.

But ah, when I lie down to rest, (To get this sweet repose) I think of novel punishments And new rules to propose, And how their mischief I can most Effectively oppose.

Thanks, thanks to you, my little friends,

For the lessons that you teach Thus in the sterner schools of life Our intellects grope and reach To grasp the import of the things Our greater teachers preach.

Wanda Gag-'12

The School Teacher's Plea.

Oh, taxpayer, you dear bugaboo, you bogie with which politicians try to frighten themselves, let us talk sense for two minutes. I am a school teacher. You entrust to me your dearest belongings, and you ask that I shall make them noble men and women. I serve as mother to your boys, fifty or sixty at a time. I have heard your wife declare that one nearly drives her crazy, but I have fifty all at once and long hours at a stretch. Day after day, year after year, I take these fifty and successive fifties and try to hold before them, unworthy as I may be, the praise and glory of a manly life, a clear and honest and generous life. I have washed their dirty little hands, bound up their cuts and scratches, sympathized with their childish griefs, loved the little rascals on days when I felt well, and tried not to hate them on days when they made me ill.

Twelve years of work with little children has not made me great, taxpayer. I know that to well. I realize that my mind is dwarfed and petty, and the humorists in the papers, men whom I taught the rudiments of their skillful English, may easily hold up to ridicule, me and my calling. You, taxpayer, with your society, your club, your outdoor sports, your business with men of large affairs, cannot know what it is to feel yourself stagnating in mind, and losing attractiveness of face and person, in a work like this, I am a woman, taxpayer, and I cannot with complete complacency regard the change in me that comes from twelve years' work teaching boys.

The wear and strain has been unnecessary. If I could have hired two rooms to live in, with a little window full of flowers, like that one at the south of your home; if I could have driven through the park occasionally in a rented carriage like the one your lady owns; if I could have hired a dressmaker who knew how really to fit a person (for I can do better work in better clothes), I would not bear my twelve years as if they had been twenty-four. An intelligent man like you is aware that teaching must rest on happy and good-natured management. You should know that my temper is the main consideration. You cannot treat me shabbily without degrading the quality of the service I can render to your boy. You cannot snub me without making your own boy a snob. You cannot count me as one of your charities without reducing your own children to be charity wards.

Do you want them to have the best? You must then make me the best. It is no Chinese puzzle. There is no calculation in your business more simple than this. Estimate what it would cost your own wife to live happily and well if you were gone. Why should you wish me, with my harder work to live on less? It will be a good investment. Taxpayer, I render you high service, and you put enough supervision in charge of me to keep me from going to sleep.

If I should stop my work, this country, in one generation, would relapse into barbarity. Every baby begins his life a savage. You expect me to perform the greatest work in civilizing him. Who taught you yourself, to read, to write, to figure, and to think, and to earn your chance to pay taxes, taxpayer? Do not be afraid of wasting your money upon me. Who am I? I am your daughter, your sister, your neighbor's girl. Each dollar that you pay to me builds up the better interests of your town. People move here and pay rent when I work well for they want their children to come to me. I engage my living room in your house; I pay my bills to you. You sell me groceries, clothes and books. Come, now, we have had enough of fault-finding. If you want me to do better, help me; do not hinder.

A Joke On The K. C. Bowling Team.

Last Saturday evening the K. C. bowling team journeyed to Mankato with the expectation of beating the rival bowling team of that city. Upon their arrival they found that they had lugged a lot of scrapiron along which evidently had been placed in their grip before leaving. Had they checked their grip, excess baggage rates would have been assessed. As it was they were so well tired out with carrying the stuff that they failed to connect with the long score as is shown by the following:
