Wm. Jensen of Stanchfield, Minn. visited with Lafayette friends for several days last week and paid the Review a pleasant call. Mr. Jensen says that there has been a great deal of rain in the vicinity of Stanchfield which lies east of the Mississippi River in the sandy central portion of the state. Potatoes form the chief crop there, and they are the best in the world grown as they are in the clean sand. It can rain a deluge in that country in the forenoon and in the afternoon the dust will be flying. This makes the right sort of conditions for the potato farmer and those who make their living in this business have done well enuf in that country to have the best of homes with every comfort and convenience. We asked Mr. Jensen if he had put in any corn and he replied, "Oh, perhaps an acre and a half" and if we had asked about other small grains the answer would have shown a proportionately small amount, the only object in raising these crops being for feed for the few animals that are required for the work in the potato fields.
