Wheeler, drill master of the Boy Scout troop of this city delivered an interesting illustrated talk on the boy scout movement and their activities at the Congregational church last Sunday evening. The pictures showed the boys in the various phases of their work and sports. It was remarked by a member of the audience that New Ulm parents evidently had great confidence in the scout master, for most of them allowed their children to attend the lecture unattended, the former being conspicuous by their absence. There are now twenty-five members of the local troop, and an attempt is being made to bring the number up to thirty, when the organization will be entitled to an advisory council, made up of business and professional men of the city.

New Ulm saloons have dispensed with the free lunch system, which has been in vogue here for these many years. An agreement to this effect was recently made by the local saloon keepers. It is claimed that the high cost of lunches is prime cause of the change. The saloon men also say that the privilege has been abused, as frequently the purchaser of a glass of beer would eat a lunch of two or three times the value.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Raedecke of Waterville spent a part of last week visiting friends and relatives in Courtland and New Ulm. Until the past year Mr. Raedecke was a teacher in the parochial school at Courtland. He says that they like their new location very much and find the people they are among very friendly and hospitable. Their neighbors arranged a surprise for them recently on the occasion of their tenth wedding anniversary and the couple were the recipients of many gifts which will long tell them of the esteem in which they are held by their acquaintances.

Clam fishers, camped on the public grounds on the Minnesota river bank, are not very well satisfied with conditions this season, according to various reports. First, some of them are displeased because the city decided to charge them rent for the use of the land on which they are camped, and also requires a deposit to insure the cleanliness of the grounds; they also express displeasure because the state has seen fit to tax them for the privilege of fishing in the waters of the state. Especially is this true of the non-residents of the state, who are required to pay considerably more than the residents. Some of them have moved farther up the stream to evade the rental of city property.

A number of the films which have been approved by the Minnesota Womens State Federated Clubs will be shown at the Ruby Theatre beginning Monday night of next week. These pictures have all been approved by the Women's clubs and are recommended as being "better pictures" and Mr. Woodmansee has decided to give New Ulm a chance to say whether they want clean and wholesome pictures or whether he must show something else in order to secure his theatre open. He would much prefer to show pictures of this sort if the people at considerable financial risk to himself taken on these pictures in order to raise the standard of his playhouse above the average. It is now up to the theatre going public to show that they are not bluffing when they talk of "better pictures".
