BABY NAMED LYDIA E.

Because Her Mother Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I could not write all my thanks for your blessed medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in a very bad condition and had lost 4 or 5 babies. One of my good friends told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and after I had taken eight or ten bottles I felt like a different woman. I kept on taking it until my baby girl was born last month and we have had her christened Lydia Elizabeth. I wish you to publish my letter to benefit other women who are suffering as I was."—Mrs. KATHERINE KUNZACKER, 1086 Manhattan Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Women who suffer from any feminine ailment should not lose hope until they have tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The many convincing testimonials constantly published in the newspapers ought to be proof enough for women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the medicine they need.

PRESS COMMENT

(Rutland Herald)
 THE NEW POLITICAL ERA
 When 23,000 voters of Vermont nominated James Hartness as republican candidate for governor Tuesday, they did considerably more than merely eliminate the other contenders. The primary of September 14 will go down in history as ushering in a new era in Vermont politics. A lot of things happened and they can be expected to happen again in the future primaries.

It would appear that the voting strength of Vermont has been increased about 50 per cent. The advent of women into politics, of course had much to do with this. The voting strength of the republican party in Vermont is now 60,000 as against 40,000. It is hard to say what proportion of the increase is represented by the women's vote. Careful students have figured about 10,000. Accept that figure as approximately correct and you have a new voting unit, unorganized and inexperienced, yet apparently voting pretty much as a unit as the Hartness led of over 10,000 indicates.

The woman's vote in its first try-out has demonstrated that it is something the future politician must consider seriously. It may be argued that nobody can 'deliver' the woman's vote to any candidate and that is probably correct and yet along certain issues that vote is apt to be pretty solid always.

The woman's vote has eliminated the old-time ward heeler and political fixer and he will never be the factor again that he once was. He lost his job when the suffrage amendment became part of the constitution of the United States. He will soon be as extinct as the dodo and he should have been kicked out by the men long ago. Frank W. Agan dealt him one body blow.

The old-line political organization is "busted." The women did it. The best boss-served candidate in the race—Frederick H. Babbitt of Bellows Falls—ran last! It was no secret during the campaign that Babbitt agents were at work in virtually every town in the state and his organization was the most perfect according to old standards. It availed him nothing. The "winkling" campaigner failed largely to reach the woman voter—he had little time to in any event—but if he did reach her, he didn't convince her.

Hartness, successful contender, and Agan, "runner-up" got their votes by new methods to a great extent—applied publicity. The vote of these candidates is a tribute to the potency of printer's ink, whether applied to newspaper pages or to tack cards and campaign "literature." Hartness and Agan held largely aloof from old-style methods.

Agan had no organization whatever and no paid workers anywhere. He advertised extensively and with discrimination in the state press. True, he followed this up with a whirlwind speaking campaign, just before the campaign came to a close, but most of his votes probably came through his advertisements.

Hartness had no organization but "farmed out" his advertising to a regularly established advertising agency. They wrote his "copy" and "placed" the "winkling" documents just as they would with any other advertiser whose appreciations for the purpose were as liberal as those of Hartness must have been. They got the Hartness program—industrial expansion—before every voter and the results indicate that they "sold" the voters on it whether he wanted to be sold or not. "It pays to advertise"—even in politics—and the Hartness and Agan showings prove it.

A contemporary somewhat cynical comment upon the Emery vote to the effect that it represented the Vermonters who want the state to stand still. He openly opposed the Hartness industrial program as one likely to depopulate the Vermont farm and a good portion of the farmer vote probably went his way. Has the bug of "big business" actually infected the pastoral Vermont? The Hartness vote would tend to answer affirmatively.

 Those who consider there is nothing interesting in flowers might change their minds if they had seen the 766 different species displayed this summer at the Fairbanks museum in St. Johnsbury. Vermont is a wonderful state to be able to display so many forms of plant life in the summer season; and it is probable that the list might have been materially lengthened. Quite a study and very interesting, we should say.

ALEXANDER DUNNETT
 (Barre Times)
 The late Alexander Dunnett of St. Johnsbury was of the type of sturdy Vermonters, both physically and mentally, which one is accustomed to associate with the state. Born in Vermont and reared in the famous old town of Peacham, he developed many of the traits which go to make up a splendid sort of individual. He was keen mentally and possessed of a good knowledge of human nature in its many phases. In law he stood high as a citizen he was rated as one of the best. As a man he was held in high esteem throughout the state. The degree of esteem in which he was held is exemplified by the many honors which came to him ever since he was first admitted to the bar back in 1877. That he was denied the honor, which he sought, of being a representative of Vermont in Congress, was not because of a low estimate of his worth by his fellow-citizens. And, in this connection, it is rather a strange coincidence that he should have passed away on the day when another contest was being waged very similar to the one in which he participated six years ago. Though denied the distinction of going to Congress, Mr. Dunnett had since then been given other recognition, which showed the extent of the confidence in which his fellow citizens held him. He was of the type truly representative of the state and had come to be recognized as one of the state's leading citizens.

 According to the findings in the case of a little boy who was killed by a revolver bullet at Willoughby, an older boy had placed a loaded revolver on the ground while he engaged in carrying wood into the woodshed of his father's house and the younger boy began to manipulate the weapon and at length put a bullet into a vital part of his own body. It is rather strange that the older boy's sense of preservation which induced him to remove the revolver from his person while he engaged in work was not extended to a greater degree than it was for the protection of others who might come in contact with the revolver after it had been removed from the owner's person. In other words if he thought it was not safe for him to carry the revolver about his person while he carried about work which might have warranted an element of danger to himself, why did he not realize that there might be equally as much danger to someone else if he left the weapon lying where

They left Saturday morning for a trip to Springfield, Mass., Albany, N. Y., and a sail down the Hudson to Mr. Dawson's home in New York City.

Mrs. Dawson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Russell of Warren Ave., a graduate of Sumner street school and a member of the Girls' Community League.

Mr. Dawson served 14 months with the U. S. Navy and has been with the Fairbanks company nearly two years as an apprentice. He will continue with the company as sales agent.

The young couple have a host of friends who extend congratulations.

Newport Man Loses Fingers In Saw
 A. J. White, proprietor of a house finishing concern in Newport suffered the loss of several fingers on his left hand, when he caught that member in a saw in his shop early Monday morning. Mr. White was rushed to the home of Carl O. White, where a physician was called and his hand treated. He was resting comfortably at last reports.

Mr. White had an accident of this same nature a few years ago when he lost one or two fingers on the same hand. In today's accident, the remainder of his fingers were taken off, leaving him with only his right hand.

Smith's Horse Shows Speed to Train
 A horse belonging to the Smith Cash Grocery company had a narrow escape on Saturday when it started to run with the approach of a train on the Boston and Maine line at the Passumpsic street crossing and ran along side of the train for a short distance. The horse crashed against the second car of the passenger train but suffered only a scratch of the front leg. The young man who was driving the horse was in a house at the time the horse started to run away. The horse stopped after the train passed without further damage being done. The horse is never frightened of a train but when alongside of one tries to keep pace with the train.

Dimensions of a Million.
 A way of realizing the meaning of a million, almost as good as counting chestnut blossoms, is to think of what it means in time. Few people realize that there are less than a million days in the whole Christian era; in fact, if we count back a million days from 1920 we come to a date well before the founding of Rome, while a million hours would take us back almost to the battle of Trafalgar.
