First National has gone the limit in the lavish production starring divine Annette Keleman in "What Women Love." It is acclaimed one of the triumphs of the year! Being lavish, spectacular, sensational! The story is full of comedy and is that of an up to date American girl with athletic tendencies with a Reformer for a father. How she drives him front and center, how she leaves him crazy and her lover Willie to despair and a case man to jail forms some absorbing drama. Wheeler Oakman and Ralph L. Lewis support Miss Keleman in this hilarious love story. Are you going to miss this show picture at the Please-U today and tomorrow?

Jack London numbers his readers by the millions. His greatest novel "The Star Rover" begins with the most powerfully dramatic situation possible that of a man, seated in a box in a theatre when the powdered arm of a woman, its fingers clutching a pistol, was thrust over his shoulder from behind the curtain and a bullet fired into the body of a prominent politician sitting in the box opposite. "The Star Rover" is a story of such unusual power, so astounding and so fascinating sweep, so gripping in its imagination that its bound to please everybody. See it at the Globe tonight.

Mudgett Case Goes to Jury
The rack (as the defense attorneys speak of it) he said he saw Amy about 10 o'clock on his way home. Why did Mudgett tell all of these foolish lies if he was innocent? He lied about everything.
They say the defendant hasn't shown any feeling during the trial. His stubbornness equals the stoicism Amy Shonio must have had when she was suffering the agonies of death up there on the hillside. Amy died as the result of blows struck, when the cartilage was broken from her nose and the blood settled back of her eyeballs.
That Amy Shonio was murdered, there is no doubt in the minds of any human being that knows anything about this case. She was killed right where her body lay and it is inconceivable that she was killed anywhere else. The blood soaked garments and the blood in the earth attest to this. Are you gentlemen convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that she was murdered there on the night of July 31. She was seen there the next day as if asleep—the sleep of death.
"Remember the expression in one of Mudgett's letters to Amy in which he said 'You need not worry about my coming home' and 'A rifle bullet would not make me tell.' While he wrote that he knew he was the one person to whom she was looking to in her trouble. This girl had yielded to him her body and he had obtained everything from her that he wished for. He couldn't have loved her. That isn't the way you men love your wives.
"Those letters offered the most convincing evidence of the relations between Arthur Mudgett and Amy Shonio. Thank God, those letters were saved. The ruler of the world often acts in bringing men to account for their crimes."
Mr. Porter spoke of the slimy trail of Detective Brown. Let me say that Detective Brown would necessarily run into him in hunting the record of this man. You wouldn't go into Sunday School to look up this man's record. Mrs. Atwell couldn't see blood or dew on Mudgett's shoes or clothing. It would have taken the penetrating glance of Mrs. Effie Miller to have seen it.
"Amy Shonio, as was said before, was seen shortly after eight o'clock going toward the path leading to the cemetery and except for the respondent she was never seen again by mortals. Shortly after that Mudgett went into the immediate vicinity of the path and they met. He said he had never been up in that field. Why did he deny it? Isn't that just what a guilty man would have done?
"I don't know who her Amy Shonio made that little garment. (Mr. Archibald held up a hole's nightgown to the view of the jury) or not. It was in her belongings. Would it have been there if she had any idea of committing a crime? It was a part of her preparation for the advent of that little child—a little child whose life was to be beaten out by a human brute.
"There is one thing more I want to call your attention to and that is the contents of Miss Shonio's stomach. You remember Dr. Stone said that strong emotions would retard or suspend digestion. Do you think she would have gone out that night to eat a midnight supper of meat, beans, potatoes, etc? No, of course she wouldn't."

In conclusion, Mr. Archibald said: "The state is here to tell you, 12 men to do your full duty. If this man is condemned by you, you are not responsible for the penalty. A man who violates the laws should pay the penalty. The law is for the protection of society. And justice demands that you do your duty in this case. If you believe this man is innocent let him go, send him out on a continuation of his present course but if you think he is guilty let that be your verdict. The state is not here to ask for blood but we are asking for justice. The blood of Amy Shonio up there on the hillside cries out to God to the state and to you 12 men to do your duty in this case."

Robert Wignall Died at North Adams
