NEWS BY TELEGRAPH

GARFIELD.

His Condition Much Improved According to Last Reports.

And Strong Hopes Entertained of His Final Recovery.

Poor Lo Playing his Old Game in Chihuahua.

Five Men Belonging to the Engineering Corps Slaughtered.

The Chihuahua Stage Stopped and the Driver Killed.

President Garfield's Condition.

Washington, 9 a. m., July 5.--The situation is much improved. The President slept better than at any time previously for an hour and a half at a time. Typhoid disappeared. There has been no vomiting since 8 p. m. The pulse has a better tone. Some chicken broth was taken this morning and retained.

DECIDEDLY IMPROVED.

Washington, 12 m.--Dr. Bliss says emphatically that the President is decidedly improved this morning and that his prospect is more favorable than at any time yet.

MURDEROUS REDS.

Special to the GAZETTE.

El Paso, July 5.--Only five of the engineering parties were killed by the Indians.

The same reds took in the stage bound for Chihuahua Sunday, eighty miles out. The Mexican driver was killed and another Mexican and an American named Comstock, escaped.

Thos. K. Pugh, of Cincinnati, fell in a fit when attacked. The reds first stopped him dead and carried him off. Pugh dropped a note saying in what direction they were taking him. Two detachments of Mexican troops are in pursuit.

The telegraph wires to the north went to pieces last night, and excepting the two bulletins at 9 a. m. and at noon yesterday we have not had a word of the associated press. This is particularly unfortunate in view of the deep interest in President Garfield, but the bulletins show that he was doing well at latest accounts.

The Attempted Assassination.

In default of telegraph we clip the following in relation to the attempted assassination of President Garfield from the latest Denver papers and which we had not received over the wires:

This dispatch was sent and a special train was at once sent to Long Branch for Mrs. Garfield.

Secretary Blaine was not going with the party but went down to bid the President good-bye. He said: "The President and I were walking arm-in-arm toward the train. I heard two shots and saw a man run. I darted after him, but seeing that he was grabbed just as he got out of the room, I came back to the President and found him on the floor. The floor was covered with blood. A number of people who were around shortly afterwards have some of that blood on their persons. I think I know the man. His name is Guiteau. The weapon used was a revolver about six inches long. It has an ivory handle and the calibre is very large. It is what is known as a California pistol. It made a very loud report."

Parke says: Both shots were fired while the assassin was behind the President.

Officers Scott and Carney got hold of the assassin and were taking him to police headquarters, he said voluntarily to them. "I did it and will go to jail for it. I am a Stalwart and Arthur will be President." He had a letter in his hand and wanted the officer to take it to General Sherman, saying it would be all right. The prisoner made no resistance saying that he had been contemplating the killing of the President, and it was for the good of the country.

About 9 o'clock the assassin went to a hack stand near the depot and engaged a hack from Barton, a colored hackman. He said he wanted to go to Glenwood cemetery in a short time, and wanted the hackman to drive very fast when he should get in the hack. He agreed to pay two dollars for the hack on the condition that the hackman would drive fast. When stopped the assassin was going to the hack he had engaged, and insisted that it was important for him to go and deliver a message to General Sherman. When the officers refused to let him go he begged them to take a letter he had to General Sherman.

Following is a copy of the letter the assassin wanted delivered to General Sherman:

To the White House:

The President's tragic death was a sad necessity, but it will unite the Republican party and save the Republic. Life is a flimsy dream, and it matters little when one goes. A human life is of small value. During the war thousands of brave boys went down without a tear. I presume the President was a Christian and that he will be happier in paradise than here. It will be no worse for Mrs. Garfield, dear soul, to part with her husband this way than by a natural death. He is liable to go at any time any way. I have no ill will toward the President. His death was a political necessity. I am a lawyer, a theologian and a politician. I am interested in the state affairs. I was with General Grant and the rest of our men during the canvass. I have some papers from the press which I shall leave with Byron Andrews (an Inter Ocean correspondent and a co-journalist), at 1420 New York avenue, where all reporters can see them. I am going to the jail.

(Signed) CHARLES GUITTEAU.

Upon the arrival of the prisoner at the jail he was attired in a suit of blue and wore a drag pulled down over his eyes, giving him the appearance of an ugly character.

It may be worthy of note that some two or three weeks ago Guiteau went to the jail for the purpose of visiting it, but was refused admittance on the ground that it was not visitors' day. He at that time mentioned his name as Guiteau and said he came from Chicago. When brought to the jail to-day he was admitted by the officer who had refused to allow him to enter, and a mutual recognition took place, Guiteau saying, "you are the man who wouldn't let me go through the jail some time ago."

The only other remark he made before being placed in his cell was that Gen. Sherman would arrive at the jail soon. Two jailors, who are now guarding his cell, state that they have seen him around the jail several times recently, and that at one occasion he appeared to be under the influence of liquor, on one of his visits subsequent to the first one mentioned.

The following letter was found in the street shortly after Guiteau's arrest, the envelope unsealed and addressed, "Please deliver at once to General Sherman or his first assistant, in charge of the Department."

GENERAL SHERMAN:

I have just shot the President. I shot him several times, as I wish him to die a political necessity. I am a lawyer, theologian and politician. I am a Stalwart of the stalwarts. I was with Gen. Grant and the rest of our men in New York during the canvass. I am going to jail. Please order out troops to take possession of the jail at once.

Very respectfully,
CHARLES GUITTEAU.

Official Communication.

Washington, July 5.--The following has been forwarded by cable: "Department of State, Washington, July 2.--To James Russell Lowell, Minister, Etc., London: The President of the United States was shot this morning by an assassin named Charles Guiteau. The weapon used was a large sized revolver. The President had just reached the Baltimore and Potomac station, at about twenty minutes past nine, intending with a portion of his cabinet, to leave on the limited express for New York. I rode in a carriage with him to the executive mansion, and was walking by his side when he was shot. The assassin was immediately arrested and the President was conveyed to a private room in the station building and surgical aid at once summoned. He has now, at twenty minutes past ten, been removed to the executive mansion. The surgeons in consultation regard his wounds as very serious, though not necessarily fatal. His vigor and health gives many hopes of his recovery. He has not lost consciousness for a moment. Inform our Ministers in Europe."

(Signed) JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

A Visit to the Jail.

Washington, D. C., July 2.--The District jail, in the eastern extremity of the city, was visited by a reporter after 11 o'clock for the purpose of obtaining an interview with Charles Guiteau, the would-be assassin of President Garfield. The officers refused admittance to the building, stating the reason therefor that they were acting under instructions received from the Attorney-General, the report being that no one should be allowed to see the prisoner. At first, indeed, the officers emphatically denied that the man had been conveyed to the jail, fearing, it appears, that should the fact be made known that he was there the building would be attacked by a mob. Information had reached them that such a move was contemplated.

The officers said that Guiteau had succeeded in reaching the rounds of the building where he was examining a scaffold from which the Hirth murderers were hanged. Pursuant to his orders from the Attorney-General, the officers in charge of the jail declined to give any further information, nor would he state in what cell the prisoner was confined.

This officer was an attendant at the old jail at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln.

Lew Wallace.

A Charge Against Our Ex-Governor--His Troops Nearly Suffer Total Defeat and Rout.

We recently published the pointed contradiction made by Gen. Lew Wallace of statements in Bateau's "Life of Grant," relative to Wallace's action in the civil war. A similar article coming to the notice of one J. J. Dempsey of New York, that individual writes an open letter to Gen. Wallace, published in the New York Sun in which he asks our ex-Governor several important questions. Dempsey signs himself "Last Colo. Sergeant 151st New York Volunteers," and the public awaits an answer from Gen. Wallace to the following:

For nearly seventeen years I have been looking for this man Wallace to ask him this question: How was it that his forces, engaged in the battle of Monocacy Bridge, Md., on July 9, 1864, made such a disorderly retreat? The first intimation we had of the presence of the enemy was a shot thrown from a three-inch rifle gun about three miles distant, somewhere in the vicinity of Frederick City, Md., which took off the leg of the orderly sergeant of Company G in my regiment, between 6 and 7 a. m., when the troops were cooking their breakfast. We immediately picked up our cooking utensils and formed a line of battle behind an adjacent hill, which we held until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, maneuvering from right to left of the line of battle, about a quarter of a mile long, that was defended by our regiment, the 151st New York, First Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Corps, when a rebel scouting party made a dash on the left of our line, near a brick house, but were obliged to retire after receiving a volley from our line. Near where I stood was planted a four-gun battery belonging to Baltimore, which had been well trained upon the enemy for some six hours, when an officer rode up, revolver in hand, and said he would shoot the first man who attempted to retreat, ordering the battery, which had no horses, to be taken away. I looked around to see where the men were that were to be shot, and for the officer that was to do the shooting, but he had vanished. Bullets were flying pretty thick, and dead men were plenty on the field. About this time I thought I would take my chances of being shot by the mounted officer and retried too, which I did to the next hill, where I stood a quarter of a mile distant covering the space in about two minutes. He found an excellent position which we might have retreated to and still held our ground, but it seems that every man at this particular part of the line was left to his fate until we found the Johnnies getting around to our left and rear near a deep railroad cut, through which many of our men retreated to be gobbled at the other end.

Had we been ordered to retreat half an hour before we did we could have reformed on this second heavy timbered hill, and, if driven from that, retreated to another position, and still another equally well protected by heavy timber, and thus have made a retrograde movement instead of suffering a total defeat and rout.

It was absolutely necessary that this battle should be fought to give the First and Second Divisions of the Sixth Corps time to come around from City Point to save Washington, threatened by Early the following day. But I shall not say anything that we were obliged to leave the field in the disorderly manner in which we did. No order to retreat; every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost, which came near being my fate upon three different occasions, but I managed to dodge them. Now, I went through the woods together with several privates and officers until after dark, when we struck the railroad, found a hand car, picked up what wounded and worn-out comrades we could find, and made good our escape, and overtook a troop train with some of the wounded on their way to Baltimore.

Next day, at about 3 o'clock, we found what was left of our regiment at Elliott's Mills, Md., having retreated about forty miles in twenty-four hours, hungry, footsore and worn out.

The hospitality and kindness of the inhabitants, especially the ladies, of Elliott's Mills will ever be remembered by the First Brigade, Third Division, Sixth Corps.

For this disorderly rout the officers in command of the Union troops are alone responsible, and of these I have always understood the chief to be Gen. Lew Wallace. I should like to see his defense.

A Mining Romance.

A year ago an American prospector of the better sort, understanding Spanish thoroughly, who had looked over the archives of the old church near Magdalena, Sonora, discovered a manuscript report of a Jesuit priest who traveled over Arizona more than one hundred years ago. The brave missionary in the cause of Christ and the interest of Spain had traversed deserts and forded rivers, crossed mountains and battled with Indians. He was finely educated, particularly in mineralogy and geology. In the course of his travels he discovered rich mines, some of which he developed and all of which he described. The manuscript describes the Silver King mine and locates it, giving longitude and latitude exactly. It is said to be a mine richer than any yet discovered, but adds that in Sonora there is a mine as far ahead of ordinary mines. The longitude and latitude of this mine are given and the paper adds that when it is developed untold wealth will be dug out and silver will become a drug in the market. It is also stated that this mine has been somewhat developed and that the surface indications were surprising. From an examination of the data Mr. John J. Carrillo, of Los Angeles, was led to hunt for the mine and he believes he has found it. He finds an old shaft at the exact locality. Large trees have grown up in it and the dump is covered with vegetation. Ages have elapsed since the miners have been silenced in death. Unceasing vegetation has in a measure obliterated work, but it is estimated that 3,000 tons of ore, averaging $100 to the ton are on the dump. Mr. Carrillo is now on the way to San Francisco with eight tons of the rock and proposes immediately to develop the mine. He expects to strike silver at a depth of forty feet below the present bottom of the shaft, and as native silver can be picked up anywhere on the old dump he has every assurance of success. It would be strange if in this iconoclastic age an old Jesuit explorer should have left such a record as to unfold the story of untold wealth in a Sonora bonanza for a Crifonmian to enrich himself. It is to be hoped that the enthusiast may have contributed his mite towards enriching the present and that his science may have done something for the progress of the American Republic. [Citizen.]

HUGH PRITCHARD, Box 16, Las Vegas, N. M.

There is only one calamity which could happen to the country which would be greater than the death of Garfield. This would be the succession to his place of Vice-President Arthur. Elected to a national office by a nation he has prostituted it to help the personal fight of the man who owns him by reason of the possession of creation, and it is a sorry comment on the contempt into which he has brought himself and his position that he should receive the first news of the death of the Chief Magistrate when he was returning from a servile visit to Albany in the interests of his creator, Conkling. Arthur is as unfit to be President of the United States as John Conkling is. He is a common ward politician. His nomination was a mistake, and grew out of the indifference with which the office of Vice-President has come to be regarded. But for the fact that the constitutional requirements for the election of a President and Vice-President make the election of one depend upon the election of the other, Arthur would have been defeated. There are thousands of Republicans who, if they could have foreseen the tragedy of yesterday, and the possibility it carries with it of Garfield's death, would have voted for Hancock rather than see a cheap New York hummer elevated to a position as President of the United States after he had been kicked out of a minor civil service place by former President for dishonesty and incompetency. Denver Tribune.

A train-dispatcher in Baltimore the other day, just as he had given the signal, discovered a woman rushing frantically down the street, dragging a little girl by the arm. He waved his hand to arrest the train and assisted the woman to get upon the car, and, as he was about to start the train again, noticed the woman and her little charge getting off. Hurrying to the spot, he asked what was the matter, and the woman replied, quite composedly, that her little girl "wanted to kiss her papa before he left."

"Do you know," said the captain, that a fathom of steel wire rope, little thicker than your cane, and weighing half a pound a foot, will pull as much as a hemp rope half a foot thick and weighing a pound and a half a foot."

"I have known a piece of wire, cap," said I, no thicker than a straw, to draw a man weighing 200 pounds the whole length of Broadway."

"Oh, come, now," exclaimed the obtuse Briton.

"Yes, sir; it was a hair-pin."

A Danbury boot-black was in South Norwalk when the train went through there on its way to Hartford with the nation's military dignitaries. "Did you see Gen. Sherman?" asked a citizen this morning while having a shine. "No; was he looking for me?" was the response. The citizen was shocked.

The production of tobacco in this country in the last ten years has increased about eighty per cent. The anti-tobacco reformers must regard this showing as very discouraging.
