The World as I Find It.

They say the world is a weary place.
Where there are never dried.
Where pleasures pass like breath on glass.

Old "Saws" Re-Set.

"You can't make a whistle out of a pig's tail."
It is impossible to construct an instrument which will emit a shrill sound by forcing the breath through it, from the caudal appendage of an adolescent porker.

"All is not gold that glitters."
Not everything that shines brightly, with either a steady or scintillating light, is a precious metal of auriferous origin.

"Make hay while the sun shines."
Improve that time when the glorious orb of day is emitting his most fervent rays, by cutting down and otherwise manipulating the proper variety of herbage which when desiccated serves as provender for domestic quadrupeds.

"Should the instrument used in the kitchen, and at the table, for cutting, not have a properly sharpened edge, it evinces that the housewife is lax in the performance of her duties, or in over-seeing the duties of her domestics.

"The stone that keeps rolling will gather no moss."
That mass of mineral matter, be it either pebble or boulder, which is constantly kept revolving upon the earth's surface, will not experience any adhesion of a cellular plant indigenous to the north side of stationary rocks and ancient trees.

"Wishers were horses, beggars might ride."
Mendicants would be able to indulge in equestrian exercises if the desire of mankind were transformed into equine quadrupeds.

"Early to bed and early to rise makes man healthy, wealthy and wise."
Retiring at a seasonable hour to one's couch, and quickly succumbing to Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep, has a tendency to keep one free from many of the ills which flesh is heir to, causes indirectly the pocketbook to become plenteous, and the bank account larger, and last, but not least, increases the sum total of one's knowledge and capacity to use it understandingly.
