Press Opinions.
NOT A GOOD ACTOR.
Christian Union: Mr. Guiteau's boisterous proceedings in the court room produce on the public an impression that he is playing the part of insanity and is not a very good actor.
MIGHT DO IT AGAIN.
Chicago Times: There is not only surprising method in the man's alleged madness, but, seen through the method a touch of viciousness that discloses a vindictive spirit quite adequate, in a character with so little moral foundation, to the "removal" of another President who should furnish him the motive by refusing to recognize his "claims" to consideration and recompense for political services rendered.
KNEW WHAT HE WAS ABOUT.
Cincinnati Gazette: Does he know that when he kills he does that for which the penalty is hanging? Then he should be hanged, no matter what insane pranks he may play. It is necessary to him, and to restrain others like him. Does the manslayer know the law's consequence of his deed? Then the consequence should follow. Even ravings maniacs are subject to fear of punishment. The threat of the whip is a terror to them.
POOR ACTING.
Syracuse Standard: His frequent, flippant, half-jocose allusions to the Almighty have no sound of sincerity. He has a studied, poorly played, then there is too much inventiveness, too large a display of tricks for a man who is serenely reposing on the omnipotent. He was too eager to obtain the help of the most skillful finite minds, and all through his confinement in jail he has shown anything but reliance on the spirit. His strong tower has been the Washington jail and the Federal guards. Even before the shooting he endeavored to examine the prison, to make sure that an inmate would be safe from the mob. No religious fanatic ever behaved in that way.
ODD, BUT RATIONAL.
Hartford Times: That the fellow has an "odd streak" in him, that he has led a crooked and fitful life, and that he has not a well balanced mind, may be proved on the trial. But did he use reason in planning the murder of the President; did he carry out his perfectly matured plan in a perfect manner; did he use sound judgment in procuring a pistol of large caliber and in practicing with it on two successive days to make his aim sure; and often watching the President's movements for two weeks, did he not select the best opportunity for making his murderous intent a success? And reasoning directly that an infuriated public might lynch him, he appealed to the authorities for military protection.

Washing Republican. The fact that Guiteau is playing the insane dodge has a crystalline clearness. While sitting in the court room he acts and whispers excitedly, rolls his eyes, and uses his fists emphatically. He is defiant, but, as in all cases of the kind, there is a possibility of the being "method in his madness." In his case we note the extreme fear he manifests when not in the very midst of the court and a posse of guards. He has a bow pendant aptly expressed it. "On entering the corridor which leads to the court room door he crowded his hat over his eyes and rushed through, dragging his guard after him, and only ceased when safely within the door. If he were really a fanatic this peculiar fear of personal violence would not be so strangely exercised. He may be "crazy," "insane," "lunatic," "off his base," or any other of the dozen things that come under the same head, but he is not too insane to be terribly afraid when he thinks the occasion is not wholly conducive to his personal safety.

Fun.
"Ah, parson, I wish I could carry my gold with me," said a rich printer, who was dying. "It might melt!" was the consoling reply.
After an enthusiastic lover spends two hours hard labor over a letter to his girl, and then mares his beauty by spilling a drop of oil over it, he first swears in a very scientific manner for a few moments, and then draws a circle around the blot and tells her it is a kiss.
"Come, now, stupid," said the school-master, "you don't know how much two and five make? Now listen. In one pocket I have two dollars and in the other five dollars. Now, how many dollars have I got?" "Let me see them, and I will tell you." School was dismissed.
A little boy from New York went into the country, visiting. He had a bowl of bread and milk. He tasted it and then hesitated a moment; when his mother asked him if he didn't like it. To which he answered, smacking his lips: "Yes, ma, I was wishing our milkman would keep a cow."
A correspondent who signs himself "Inertia" wants to know "what is the best cure for laziness?" Well, there are several good cures, but suppose you try carrying a new laid hornet's nest around the piazza every morning for a week. There won't be anything lazy about you during the latter part of the promenade, and unless the nest gives out before you do, it will prove a perfect cure.
