

THE JURY QUESTIONS THE GOOD JUDGE AND GOES ITS WAY

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

St. Patrick's day again has come
To cheer the Irish heart
And bring back to the memory
Scenes in the good Ould Dart.
The sons and daughters of the isle

That lies so far away
Are all astir and to the saint
Their warmest tributes pay.

Each lad has pinned upon his breast

That emblem held so dear,
The shamrock, famed in tale
and song

And sign of faith sincere.
Each girl has donned her finest gown

And plainly keeps in view
A shamrock, ribbon or a bow
That's emerald in hue.

Along the city's thoroughfares
The marchers proudly go,
With sashes and regalia bright
And every face aglow.
Broad banners with their golden harps

At intervals are seen,
And bands are often striking up
The "Wearing of the Green."

Stock with Worms.
Few people realize the extent of animal suffering caused by worms, that multiply in the stomach and intestines. Hogs and sheep are nearly always infested with worms—profits are entirely lost by neglect to rid animals of these pests. Thousands of dollars can be saved in every community if owners will supply their stock with "Sal Vet", the great worm destroyer and live stock conditioner. We are exclusive agents in this locality for this famous guaranteed preparation. Come in and let us tell you more about "Sal Vet."—Ed. Quistgard.

Twelve Good Reasons Why Corn Belt Farmers Should Raise More Live Stock.

(By John A. Spoor.)

Some of the reasons why corn belt farmers should raise more live stock are the following:

1. Because it will pay.
2. Because the country needs more meat.
3. Because the soil needs more fertilizer.
4. Because the raising and feeding of live stock on farms enhance soil fertility. Soil fertility is the foundation of agricultural prosperity, and agricultural prosperity is the basis of general prosperity.
5. Because neither corn prices nor land values can be maintained without the raising and feeding of live stock on farms.
6. Because live stock utilizes farm waste and turns it into money.
7. Because live stock condenses values on the farm; can walk to the market or shipping point; can be transported and marketed at less expense and realizes greater net returns than any other farm product.
8. Because the market demands younger animals for slaughter.
9. Because pure-bred stock is now selling at relatively low prices, and those who stock up first and stay in longest will reap the greatest rewards in improved herds and more profitable returns.
10. Because association with domestic animals on the farm is essential to the right development of the character and practical knowledge and ability of children.
11. Because the presence of live stock inspires a love for the farm, and tends to prevent desertion of the farm for the city.
12. Because it is every farmer's sacred duty to leave his farm in at least as good condition as when he found it, for use by future generations, and this he cannot do without the fertilizing elements furnished by live stock.
