

WHAT'S the good of a tobacco that makes you take a big wad and grind and grind on it?

"Right-Cut" is the Real Tobacco Chew that gives you real tobacco satisfaction from a small chew.

That's why men are glad to get "Right-Cut," and to pass the glad word along to every man who chews.

It's pure, rich, tobacco—seasoned and sweetened just enough.

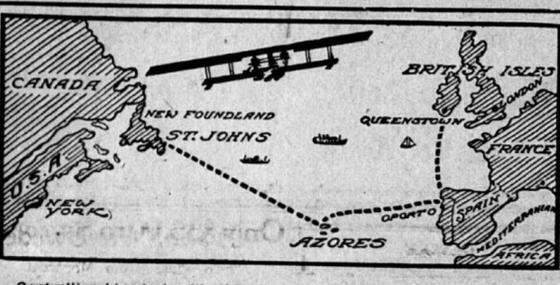

Take a very small chew—less than one-quarter the old size. It will be more satisfying than a mouthful of ordinary tobacco. Just nibble on it until you find the strength chew that suits you. Tuck it away. Then let it rest. See how easily and evenly the real tobacco taste comes, how it satisfies without grinding, how much less you have to spit, how few chews you take to be tobacco satisfied. That's why it is the Real Tobacco Chew. That's why it costs less in the end.

It is a ready chew, cut fine and short shred so that you won't have to grind on it with your teeth. Grinding on ordinary candied tobacco makes you spit too much.

The taste of pure, rich tobacco does not need to be covered up with molasses and licorice. Notice how the salt brings out the rich tobacco taste in "Right-Cut."

If your dealer does not sell it, send us 10c. in stamps for a pouch of "Right-Cut" Chewing Tobacco.

LAMPBLACK QUALITIES.

One of the Best Wearing Pigments Known to Painters.

Lampblack is one of the most permanent pigments. It is composed principally of carbon, with usually a small percentage of mineral matter and moisture present. It has remarkable covering and coloring properties, and it wears like the eternal truth. While it is not exactly jet black, having a gray and, in some samples, a sooty appearance, it is, nevertheless, a color of strong individuality and its use in connection with other pigments is considerable and always to the benefit of the wearing properties of the mixture.

No paint shop stock of supplies is complete without at least a small quantity of refined lampblack. The remarkable wearing properties of this black are attested in ancient burial places, where grave markers made of wood and lettered with lampblack show the wood actually worn away while the black letters, standing out as though carved from the timber, remain firm, distinct and intact.

NOVEL WATER TOWER.

Improved Type of Machine Throws Streams in Various Directions.

Differing from the usual form of water tower which throws only one stream of water upon the roof or interior of a burning building, a new type has been invented designed to throw a number of streams of water in various directions against the flames. The discharge pipe of the new tower is constructed so that it may be projected into a window or other opening, the end being equipped with a number of nozzles presented in different directions. The pipe may be raised or lowered or tilted at any angle.

MANUFACTURED FUEL.

Anthracite and Bituminous Coal Used For Making Briquettes.

Coal briquettes to the amount of 181,859 short tons, valued at $1,007,327, were manufactured in 1913, according to the United States geological survey. The figures for 1913 show a decrease of 17 per cent in the tonnage of briquettes manufactured, but an increase of over 5 1/2 per cent in value over the figures for 1912. Seventeen briquetting plants were in operation during the year, eight in the eastern states, five in the central states and four on the Pacific coast. Seven of these plants used anthracite or "fines," five used bituminous or semibituminous coal, two used carbon residue from oil gas works and the others used mixed coals. Coal tar pitch is the principal binder employed, eight plants using it. Patented binders were used at five plants.

If the future of this infant relative of the coal mining industry is to be judged by the record of 1913 the judgment should be based on the increase in value rather than on the decrease in plants and in tonnage. Briquetted fuel in the United States is essentially a domestic fuel, for which there was a slackened demand in 1913 owing to the exceptional mildness of the winter of 1912-13 and of last November and December.

Inserting Wires in Gas Pipes.

Inserting electric wires in gas pipes is very difficult, especially if the pipe has any bends in it, says Popular Mechanics. A contractor having one of these pipes in a newel post that had three ninety degree turns easily overcame the trouble by inserting a line for drawing in the wire with the use of a vacuum cleaner. A string was made into a ball almost as large as the inside diameter of the pipe and, fastening one end, the ball was started in the pipe at one end and the smallest nozzle of the cleaner placed over the other end. The ball was quickly sucked through the pipe, leaving a line that was used to draw in the wire.

Cover For a Stair.

A very convenient contrivance for moving heavy articles up and down stairs consists of a door of hard wood, so hinged that it will fit down snugly over the steps when in use. When not in use it is turned up against the cellar wall and held there by means of a catch. Barrels, bags, machinery, etc., may be lowered into a basement or elevated to upper floors with comparative ease in this manner.

High Priced Coal.

A ton of coal once sold for $2,150,400. Some wise London jewelers spoiled a ton of perfectly good coal by cutting and polishing it and mounting it in scarfpins. They were worn as ornaments of the recent great coal strike.—Power.

Sharpening a Knife.

A razorlike edge can be put on a knife blade by carefully stropping it without lubricant on a piece of smooth aluminium after first whetting on a distone.

AT THE TREE OF DEATH

By A. L. MESERVE.

Two men stood side by side in the heart of the forest one autumn afternoon as the sun was going down. They were nearly of the same age, and in the very prime of life.

Each was armed with a long rifle and a knife.

Upon their faces was a mingled look of sorrow, and stern determination, which plainly showed that some ill fortune had come to them.

And, indeed, ill luck had come to one of them. All that he possessed in this world which was dear to him had fallen beneath the hand of the red destroyer.

His wife and children had that very morning been slain by the savages, and the cabin which had been their happy home given to the flames.

He had been absent hunting in the forest at the time, and knew nothing of the terrible misfortune which had befallen him until he stood upon the edge of his clearing, and saw the work of devastation which the red fiends had done.

Dick White, his friend, stood by and cheered him as well as he could in this, his hour of need. He seemed to divine what was passing in Hart's mind, and he said:

"We cannot help them. They are past our aid now. But there is one thing, Simon, that we can do. We can live and work for vengeance. Let us follow the murderers, and not give over the search until they are wiped from the earth, or we have fired our last shot."

"You are right, Dick," answered the settler, grasping him by the hand. "I will live for vengeance."

For the space of a minute he gave way to his anguish, then he exclaimed, suddenly:

"Come, the trail is plain before us. Let us take it and follow on at once. I never before thirsted for the blood of a redskin. Now I would wipe out the whole accursed race at one blow if I but had the power to do it."

They lost no more time about the ruins of the cabin, but started off at once. The trail was easy to follow, and they had gone on until they had reached the point where we see them standing in the heart of the great silent forest, with the sun going down before them.

For a few moments they had been standing motionless, without a word passing between them; but now Dick White broke the silence by exclaiming:

"Simon, we are almost upon them."

"What makes you think so, Dick?"

"Look. Do you not see how fresh the trail is? It cannot have been made a half hour ago. There! Did you see that twig spring up there? It would not have done so had it not just been pressed down. They are not a mile away now, and I'll bet they're going to camp about the Hollow Oak."

"I hope that you may be right. I long to be dealing blows of vengeance upon them. It does seem as though I could not content myself much longer."

Swiftly, yet cautiously, they glided along the trail, while the sun went down behind the western tree tops and the shadows of evening began to gather thickly about them.

Crowning an eminence, they could see through the twilight the hollow oak, beneath the branches of which they felt sure of finding the savages.

The night was come when at length they stood close to it, and saw shining through the trees the light of a camp fire.

Silently they crept nearer and nearer, until at last they stood so close to the tree that they could count the savages clustering about the fire. They were seven in number.

As motionless as statues they stood there, with their eyes fixed upon their enemies. Slowly the minutes went by. It seemed that the time for them to strike would never come.

The light of the camp fire grew paler and paler, and at last only a faint gleam remained. The savages huddled about it, and to all appearance each and every one was buried in slumber.

The hour of vengeance had arrived. Noiselessly the two hunters crept toward their victims. In one hand they held their rifles and in the other their knives. A few steps brought them to the side of the nearest savages.

"For my wife, my children!" exclaimed Simon Hart, in a whisper, as he buried his knife to the hilt in the heart of a savage.

The blow of Dick White was no less strong and sure, and two of the savages lay weltering in their gore, their career ended forever.

So silently and surely had the blows been struck that neither had uttered so much as a groan. Their comrades still slept on, unsuspecting of the doom impending.

Again the knives of the avengers were raised, and true to their aim they did the work assigned to them.

But three of the savages now remained.

"Another blow for my murdered ones," shouted Simon Hart, in a tone of triumph which rang out like a trumpet through the stillness of the night.

The remaining savages sprang to their feet, but before they could raise an arm in their defense a couple of bullets ended the career of two of them forever. The remaining savage turned to flee, but he had hardly quitted his tracks before Simon Hart was upon him, and one blow completed the work of vengeance.

For years thereafter the Hollow Oak was known to the settlers of that region as the Tree of Death.
