

IT'S all off with the big wad, big spit kind, when a man learns to use the small chew of "Right-Cut," the Real Tobacco Chew. That's why he is so eager to tell his friends the good news.

A little chew of pure, rich, mellow tobacco—cut fine, short shred—seasoned and sweetened just enough, cuts out so much of the grinding and spitting.

Take a very small chew—less than one-quarter the old size. It will be more satisfying than a mouthful of ordinary tobacco. Just tuck it in until you find the strength chew that suits you. Tuck it away. Then let it rest. See how easily and evenly the real tobacco taste comes, how it satisfies without grinding, how much less you have to spit, how few chews you take to be tobacco satisfied. That's why it is The Real Tobacco Chew. That's why it costs less in the end.

It is a ready chew, cut fine and short shred so that you won't have to grind on it with your teeth. Grinding ordinary candied tobacco makes you spit too much.

The taste of pure, rich tobacco does not need to be covered up with molasses and licorice. Notice how the salt brings out the rich tobacco taste in "Right-Cut."

One small chew takes the place of two big chews of the old kind.

BABY BEEF GIVES FARMER A PROFIT

Business of Growing and Feeding Young Stock Becoming Popular.

BY HOWARD R. SMITH, Division of Dairy and Animal Husbandry, Minnesota College of Agriculture.

It has been pointed out that the conditions in Minnesota are favorable for the raising of more calves for beef production. A class of beef very popular with farmers in some sections, for reasons which will be explained, and in strong demand at the market centers is known as "Baby Beef."

This means fat calves ranging from eight to twelve months of age, weighing from 600 to 900 pounds each. In order to get the necessary fatness to command a high price it is desirable first of all to breed a good class of beef calves such as might be had by the use of a low-set, thick-fleshed sire of one of the beef breeds. Early finishing qualities seem to be quite largely a matter of type rather than breed. While the Herefords on the average are a little more early-maturing than the other breeds, the short-legged Angus and Scotch Short-horn sires will do quite as well. A good class of beef calves can be produced from ordinary grade cows that may be good milkers, if the sire is of the extreme beef type and pure bred so that the calves will more nearly resemble the sire than the dam.

Heavy Grain Feeding.

This class of beef is well adapted to farms where there is a sufficient number of cows or sheep to consume most of the roughage and where there is the required amount of grain available for fattening the calves. It takes heavy grain feeding to produce good baby beef—all the calves will eat just as early as they can be induced to take it and up to the time they are sold. They must be given more high priced grain than roughage, but it pays because they take less feed for a pound of gain at that early age, and if they are very fat they will bring as much per pound as larger cattle. When beef is scarce and high as at present, the housewife asks for a small cut and these small carcasses are in good demand in most cities. Heifer calves from good beef sires are well adapted to this use because they are finer in bone and fatten faster than steers of the same breeding.

Early Start on Milk.

If calves are allowed whole milk from the dams they get an earlier start in the fattening process. This seems rather extravagant, but it often happens that a farmer does not have the labor to milk as many cows as he would like to keep to consume his feed. Moreover, if the calf weighs 600 pounds and brings $50 at the age of nine months—not at all unusual in recent years—the cow is paying well for her feed. With plenty of grain supplementing the milk two such calves can be raised by one good sized heavy milking cow. Calves well reared on skim milk will answer the purpose but require a little more time.

Self-Feeder is Useful.

A self-feeder for the grain is a great convenience for fattening calves. They will not get too much for this purpose. It may be of interest to know just what such a calf can be induced to eat. In one experiment the writer found that calves averaging 500 pounds in weight, each consumed the following as a day's ration: Corn 9 pounds, alfalfa 6 pounds, and corn silage 6 pounds. The average gain per day for a period of four months—seven to eleven months of age—was 2.26 pounds. With corn selling at that time at 66 cents per bushel, alfalfa $10 per ton and silage valued at $3 per ton the cost of feed for 100 pounds of gain was $6.14—approximately $1.26 per hundred less than the market value of the calves at the close of the experiment. These calves had been reared on skim milk and were of an average quality. With clover instead of alfalfa it would pay to feed each calf one pound per day of linseed or cottonseed meal. With neither clover nor alfalfa, each calf should have one and one-half pounds of one of these concentrated protein feeds. One-third of the grain ration might consist of oats or barley, though corn is usually a cheaper feed. As high as ten pounds per day of a good quality of silage made from well matured corn with a little less grain than mentioned above might lessen the cost of gains a little. Without silage, well cured corn stover would give fair results. Silage, however, is much more relished by calves and will be consumed without waste. Every farmer who is feeding for beef production should provide himself with a silo.

The demand for "Baby Beef" is likely to continue and as it can be produced under most conditions at less expense than more mature beef it should appeal to the many farmers of this state.

The Pekin is one of the most popular ducks on the large duck farms of the United States. Creamy white in color. It is a nonsetting breed, and lays a large white egg. Standard weights: Drake, eight pounds; duck, seven pounds.

A Nervous Woman Finds Relief From Suffering.

Women who suffer from extreme nervousness, often endure much suffering before finding any relief. Mrs. Joseph Snyder, of Tiffin, O., had such an experience, regarding which she says:

"Six months I was bedfast with nervous prostration. I had sinking spells, a cold, clammy feeling, could not stand the slightest noise. At times I would almost fly to pieces; stomach very weak. My husband insisted on my taking Dr. Miles' Nervine, and I began to improve before I had finished the first bottle until I was entirely cured."

MRS. JOSEPH SNYDER, 262 Hudson St., Tiffin, Ohio.

Many remedies are recommended for diseases of the nervous system that fail to produce results because they do not reach the seat of the trouble. Dr. Miles' Nervine has proven its value in such cases so many times that it is unnecessary to make claims for it. You can prove its merits for yourself by getting a bottle of your druggist, who will return the price if you receive no benefit.

MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

Miles' Nervine, and I began to improve before I had finished the first bottle until I was entirely cured."
